

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

The first edition since the 17th century

BODLEIAN LIBRARY

---

BOUGHT OUT OF THE
GORDON DUFF FUND

1

2

3

4

600101717N

DEVOTIONS

UPON EMERGENT OCCASIONS AND SEVERAL STEPS IN MY SICKNESS DIGESTED INTO

- 1 MEDITATIONS UPON OUR HUMAN CONDITION
- 2 EXPOSTULATIONS AND DEBATEMENTS WITH GOD
- 3 PRAYERS UPON THE SEVERAL OCCASIONS TO HIM

SERMON COMMEMORATIVE OF LADY DANVERS

DEATHS DUELL HIS OWN FUNERAL

SERMON

BY JOHN DONNE DD

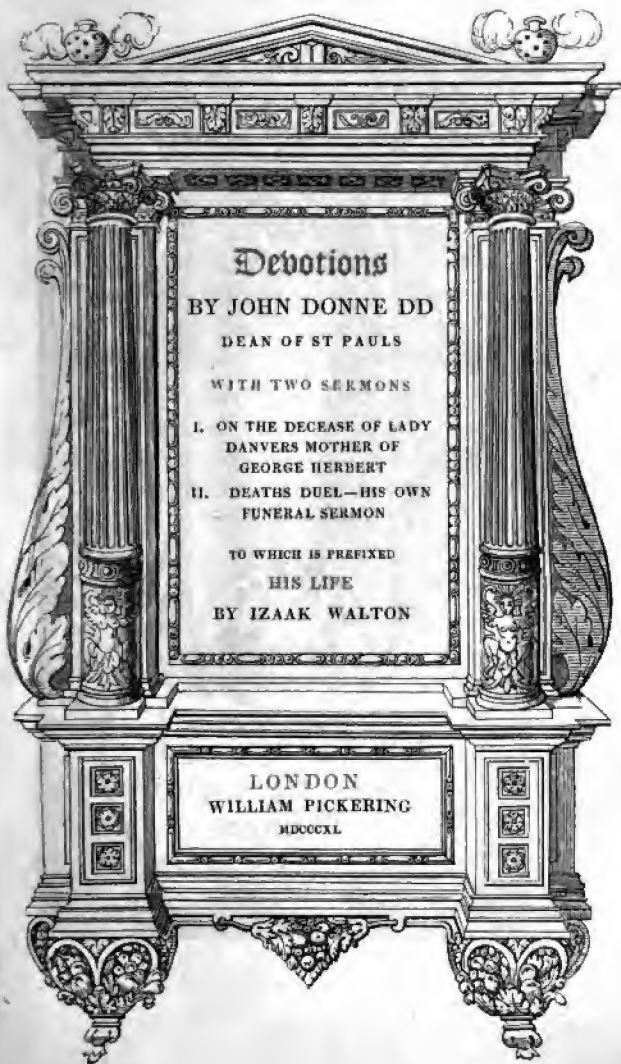

Devotions

BY JOHN DONNE DD

DEAN OF ST PAULS

WITH TWO SERMONS

- I. ON THE DECEASE OF LADY
DANVERS MOTHER OF GEORGE HERBERT
- II. DEATHS DUEL—HIS OWN
FUNERAL SERMON

TO WHICH IS PREFIXED

HIS LIFE

BY IZAAK WALTON

LONDON
WILLIAM PICKERING
MDCCLX

LONDON
C. WHITTINGHAM, TOOKS COURT

ADVERTISEMENT OF THE PUBLISHER.

TO render this edition of Dr. Donne's Devotions more acceptable to the public the following pieces have been added. I. Walton's Life of the Author, with its original Dedication to Sir Robert Holt of Aston; this dedication first appeared in the second edition, but has been omitted in every subsequent one. II. A letter from Dr. Donne to the Duke of Buckingham. III. A letter to Sir Robert Carr, afterwards Earl of Ancram. Both letters relate to the Book of Devotions. IV. A Sermon by Dr. Donne on the death of Lady Danvers, the mother of his friend George Herbert, of which Walton has recorded that he was himself a hearer. V. Death's Duel, called by King James the Doctor's own funeral sermon.

The Book of Devotions was first printed in 1624, and passed through at least five editions; the fifth appeared in 1638, and from that time to the present it is believed that no edition has been published. In the edition of 1638 was added a frontispiece engraved by Marshall, representing Dr. Donne in his winding sheet,

*THE EPISTLE DEDICATORY*.*

TO MY NOBLE AND HONOURED FRIEND,

SIR ROBERT HOLT,

OF ASTON, IN THE COUNTY OF WARWICK,

BARONET.

SIR,

WHEN this relation of the life of Doctor Donne was first made publick, it had, besides the approbation of our late learned and eloquent king, a conjunction with the author's most excellent sermons to support it; and thus it lay some time fortified against prejudice, and those passions that are by busy and malicious men too freely vented against the dead.

And yet, now, after almost twenty years, when, though the memory of Dr. Donne himself must not, cannot die, so long as men speak English; yet when I thought time had made this relation of him so like myself, as to become useless to the world, and content to be forgotten, I find that a retreat into a desired privacy will not be afforded; for the printers will again * Prefixed to the life of Dr. Donne, the second impression. 1658.

x     THE EPISTLE DEDICATORY

expose it and me to publick exceptions ; and without those supports which we first had and needed ; and in an age, too, in which truth and innocence have not been able to defend themselves from worse than severe censures.

This I foresaw ; and Nature teaching me self-preservation, and my long experience of your abilities assuring me that in you it may be found, to you, Sir, do I make mine addresses for an umbrage and protection ; and I make it with so much boldness, as to say, it were degenerous in you not to afford it.

For, Sir, Dr. Donne was so much a part of yourself, as to be incorporated into your family by so noble a friendship, that I may say there was a marriage betwixt him and your reverend grandfather (John King, bishop of London), who in his life was an angel of our once glorious church, and now no common star in heaven.

And Dr. Donne's love died not with him, but was put on immortality ; and so this mortal was turned into a love that cannot die.

THE EPISTLE DEDICATORY xi

And, Sir, it was pity he was lost to you in your minority, before you had attained a judgment to put a true value upon the living beauties and elegancies of his conversation ; and pity too, that so much of them as were capable of such an expression, were not drawn by the pencil of a Titian or a Tintoret, by a pen equal and more lasting than their art ; for his life ought to be the example of more than that age in which he died. And yet this copy, though very much, indeed too much short of the original, will present you with some features not unlike your dead friend, and with fewer blemishes and more ornaments than when it was first made publick, which creates a contentment to myself, because it is the more worthy of him, and because I may with more civility entitle you to it.

And in this design of doing so, I have not a thought of what is pretended in most dedications, a commutation for courtesies : no, indeed sir, I put no such value upon this trifle ; for your owning it will rather increase my obligations. But my desire is, that into whose hands soever this shall fall, it may to them be a testimony of my gratitude to yourself and family, who descended to such a degree of humility as to admit me into their friendship in the days of my youth, and, notwithstanding my many infirmities, have continued me in it till I am become gray-headed ; and as time has added to my years, have still increased and multiplied their favours.

This, Sir, is the intent of this dedication ; and

xii THE EPISTLE DEDICATORY

having made the declaration of it thus publick, I shall conclude it with commending them and you to God's dear love.

I remain, Sir,

What your many merits have made me to be,

The humblest of your servants,

IZAACK WALTON.

THE INTRODUCTION

IF that great master of language and art, Sir Henry Wotton, the late provost of Eton College, had lived to see the publication of these sermons *, he had presented the world with the author's life exactly written ; and it was pity he did not ; for it was a work worthy his undertaking, and he fit to undertake it : betwixt whom, and the author, there was so mutual a knowledge, and such a friendship contracted in their youth, as nothing but death could force a separation. And though their bodies were divided, their affections were not : for that learned knight's love followed his friend's fame beyond death and the forgetful grave ; which he testified by entreating me, whom he acquainted with his design, to inquire of some particulars that concerned it, not doubting but my knowledge of the author, and love to his memory, might make my diligence useful : I did most gladly undertake the employment, and continued it with great content, till I had made my collection ready to be augmented and completed by his matchless pen : but then, death prevented his intentions.

* Originally written for, and prefixed to, Dr. Donne's Eighty Sermons, fo. 1640.

When I heard that sad news, and heard also that these sermons were to be printed, and want the author's life, which I thought to be very remarkable; indignation or grief, (indeed I know not which,) transported me so far, that I reviewed my forsaken collections, and resolved the world should see the best plain picture of the author's life that my artless pencil, guided by the hand of truth, could present to it.

And if I shall now be demanded, as once Pompey's poor bondman was,—(the grateful wretch had been left alone on the sea-shore, with the forsaken dead body of his once glorious lord and master: and was then gathering the scattered pieces of an old broken boat to make a funeral pile to burn it, which was the custom of the Romans),—"Who art thou that alone hast the honour to bury the body of Pompey the great?" So, who am I that do thus officiously set the author's memory on fire? I hope the question midst of this officious duty, confident I am, that he will not disdain this well-meant sacrifice to his memory: for, whilst his conversation made me and many others happy below, I know his humility and gentleness were then eminent; and I have heard divines say, those virtues that were but sparks upon earth, become great and glorious flames in heaven.

Before I proceed further, I am to entreat the reader to take notice, that when Dr. Donne's sermons were first printed, this was then my excuse for daring to write his life; and I dare not now appear without it.

THE LIFE OF JOHN DONNE,
D.D.

MASTER JOHN DONNE was born in London in the year 1573, of good and virtuous parents ; and though his own learning and other multiplied merits may justly appear sufficient to dignify both himself and his posterity, yet the reader may be pleased to know, that his father was masculinely and lineally descended from a very ancient family in Wales, where many of his name now live, that deserve and have great reputation in that country.

By his mother he was descended of the family of the famous and learned Sir Thomas More, sometime lord chancellor of England ; as also from that worthy and laborious judge Rastall, who left posterity the vast statutes of the law of this nation most exactly abridged.

He had his first breeding in his father's house, where a private tutor had the care of him, until the tenth year of his age ; and in his eleventh year was sent to the University of Oxford, having at that time a good command both of the French and Latin tongue. This, and some other of his remarkable abilities, made one then give this censure of him ;

that this age had brought forth another Picus Mirandula, of whom story says, that he was rather born than made wise by study.

There he remained some years in Hart Hall, having, for the advancement of his studies, tutors of several sciences to attend and instruct him, till time made him capable, and his learning, expressed in public exercises, declared him worthy to receive his first degree in the schools, which he forbore by advice from his friends, who, being for their religion of the Romish persuasion, were conscionably averse to some parts of the oath that is always tendered at those times, and not to be refused by those that expect the titular honour of their studies.

About the fourteenth year of his age, he was transplanted from Oxford to Cambridge, where, that he might receive nourishment from both soils, he stayed till his seventeenth year; all which time he was a most laborious student, often changing his studies, but endeavouring to take no degree, for the reasons for improve his knowledge, and to that end appointed him tutors both in the mathematics, and in all the other liberal sciences, to attend him. But with these arts they were advised to instil into him particular principles of the Romish church; of which those tutors professed (though secretly) themselves to be members.

They had almost obliged him to their faith, having for their advantage, besides many opportunities, the example of his dear and pious parents, which was a most powerful persuasion, and did work much upon him, as he professeth in his preface to his Pseudo-Martyr, a book of which the reader shall have some account in what follows.

He was now entered into the eighteenth year of his age, and at that time had betrothed himself to no religion that might give him any other denomination than a Christian. And reason and piety had both persuaded him, that there could be no such sin as schism, if an adherence to some visible church were not necessary.

About the nineteenth year of his age, he being then unresolved what religion to adhere to, and considering how much it concerned his soul to choose the most orthodox, did therefore (though his youth and health promised him a long life), to rectify all scruples that might concern that, presently lay aside all study of the law, and of all other sciences that might give him a denomination; and begun seriously to survey and consider the body of divinity, as it was then controverted betwixt the Reformed and the Roman Church. And as God's blessed Spirit did then awaken him to the search, and in that industry did never forsake him, (they be his own words in his preface to Pseudo-Martyr), so he calls the same Holy Spirit to witness this protestation, that, in that disquisition and search, he proceeded with humility and diffidence in himself; and by that which he took to be the safest way, namely, frequent prayers, and an indifferent affection to both parties; and indeed, truth had too much light about her, to be hid from so sharp an inquirer, and he had too much ingenuity not to acknowledge he had found her.

Being to undertake this search, he believed the Cardinal Bellarmine to be the best defender of the Roman cause, and therefore betook himself to the examination of his reasons. The cause was weighty, and wilful delays had been inexcusable both towards God and his own conscience; he therefore proceeded in this search with all moderate haste; and about the twentieth year of his age, did show the then Dean of useful observations of those countries, their laws and manner of government, and returned perfect in their languages.

The time that he spent in Spain was, at his first going into Italy, designed for travelling to the Holy Land, and for viewing Jerusalem and the Sepulchre of our Saviour. But at his being in the furthest parts of Italy, the disappointment of company, or of a safe convoy, or the uncertainty of returns of money into those remote parts, denied him that happiness, which he did often occasionally mention with a deploration.

Not long after his return into England, that exemplary pattern of gravity and wisdom, the Lord Ellesmere, then Keeper of the Great Seal, the Lord Chancellor of England, taking notice of his learning, languages, and other abilities, and much affecting his person and behaviour, took him to be his chief secretary, supposing and intending it to be an introduction to some more weighty employment in the state, for which his lordship did often protest he thought him very fit.

Nor did his lordship in this time of Master Donne's attendance upon him, account him to be so much his servant, as to forget he was his friend; and to testify it, did always use him with much courtesy, appointing him a place at his own table, to which he esteemed his company and discourse to be a great ornament.

He continued that employment for the space of five years, being daily useful, and not mercenary to his friends; during which time he (I dare not say unhappily) fell into such a liking, (as with her approbation), increased into a love with a young gentlewoman that lived in that family, who was niece to the Lady Ellesmere, and daughter to sir George More, then Chancellor of the Garter and Lieutenant of the Tower.

Sir George had some intimation of it, and knowing prevention to be a great part of wisdom, did therefore remove her with much haste from that to his own house at Lothesley, in the county of Surrey; but too late, by reason of some faithful promises which were so interchangeably passed, as never to be violated by either party.

These promises were only known to themselves; and the friends of both parties used much diligence, and many arguments, to kill or cool their affections to each other, but in vain; for love is a flattering mischief, that hath denied aged and wise men a foresight of those evils that too often prove to be the sions might make it the less enormous when it was known, it was purposely whispered into the ears of many that it was so, yet by none that could affirm it. But to put a period to the jealousies of Sir George (doubt often begetting more restless thoughts than the certain knowledge of what we fear), the news was, in favour to Mr. Donne, and with his allowance, made known to Sir George, by his honourable friend and neighbour, Henry Earl of Northumberland. But it was to Sir George so immeasurably unwelcome, and so transported him, that, as though his passion of anger and inconsideration might exceed theirs of love and error, he presently engaged his sister, the Lady Ellesmere, to join with him to procure her lord to discharge Mr. Donne of the place he held under his lordship. This request was followed with violence; and though Sir George were remembered, that errors might be over-punished, and desired therefore to forbear till second considerations might clear some scruples, yet he became restless until his suit was granted, and the punishment executed. And though the Lord Chancellor did not, at Mr. Donne's dismissal, give him such a commendation as the great Emperor Charles the Fifth did of his secretary Eraso, when he presented him to his son and successor, Philip the Second, saying, "That in his Eraso, he gave to him a greater gift than all his estate, and all the kingdoms which he then resigned to him;" yet the Lord Chancellor said, "He parted with a friend, and such a secretary, as was fitter to serve a king than a subject."

Immediately after his dismissal from his service, he sent a sad letter to his wife, to acquaint her with it, and after the subscription of his name, writ,

JOHN DONNE, ANNE DONNE, UN-DONE ;

and God knows it proved too true ; for this bitter physic of Mr. Donne's dismissal was not strong enough to purge out all Sir George's choler ; for he was not satisfied till Mr. Donne, and his sometime compupil in Cambridge that married him, namely, Samuel Brook, (who was after Doctor in Divinity, and Master of Trinity College), and his brother, Mr. Christopher Brook, sometime Mr. Donne's chamber-fellow in Lincoln's Inn, who gave Mr. Donne his wife, and witnessed the marriage, were all committed to three several prisons.

Mr. Donne was first enlarged ; who neither gave rest to his body or brain, nor to any friend in whom he might hope to have an interest, until he had procured an enlargement for his two imprisoned upon passionate men; and it proved so with Sir George; for these, and a general report of Mr. Donne's merits, together with his winning behaviour (which, when it would entice, had a strange kind of elegant irresistible art), these and time had so dispassionated Sir George, that as the world had approved his daughter's choice, so he also could not but see a more than ordinary merit in his new son; and this at last melted him into so much remorse (for love and anger are so like agues, as to have hot and cold fits, and love in parents, though it may be quenched, yet is easily rekindled, and expires not till death denies mankind a natural heat), that he laboured his son's restoration to his place, using to that end both his own and his sister's power to her lord; but with no success; for his answer was, "That though he was unfeignedly sorry for what he had done, yet it was inconsistent with his place and credit to discharge and readmit servants at the request of passionate petitioners."

Sir George's endeavour for Mr. Donne's readmission was by all means to be kept secret (for men do more naturally reluct for errors, than submit to put on those blemishes that attend their visible acknowledgment): but, however, it was not long before Sir George appeared to be so far reconciled as to wish their happiness, and not to deny them his paternal blessing, but yet refused to contribute any means that might conduce to their livelihood.

Mr. Donne's estate was the greatest part spent in many chargeable travels, books, and dear-bought experience; he out of all employment that might yield a support for himself and wife, who had been curiously and plentifully educated, both their natures generous, and accustomed to confer, and not to receive, courtesies: these, and other considerations, but chiefly that his wife was to bear a part in his sufferings, surrounded him with many sad thoughts, and some apparent apprehensions of want.

But his sorrows were lessened, and his wants prevented, by the seasonable courtesy of their noble kinsman, Sir Francis Wooley, of Pirford in Surrey, who entreated them to a cohabitation with him, where they remained with much freedom to themselves, and equal content to him for some years; and, as their charge increased (she had yearly a child), so did his love and bounty.

It hath been observed by wise and considering men, that wealth hath seldom been the portion, and never the mark, to discover good people; but that Almighty God, who disposeth all things wisely, hath of his abundant goodness denied it (he only knows in every age, some such men to serve at his altar, as have been piously ambitious of doing good to mankind; a disposition that is so like to God himself, that it owes itself only to him, who takes a pleasure to behold it in his creatures. These times (anno 1648) he did bless with many such, some of which still live to be patterns of apostolical charity, and of more than human patience. I have said this, because I have occasion to mention one of them in my following discourse; namely, Dr. Morton, the most laborious and learned bishop of Durham; one that God hath blessed with perfect intellectuals and a cheerful heart at the age of ninety-four years (and is yet living); one, that in his days of plenty, had so large a heart as to use his large revenue to the encouragement of learning and virtue, and is now (be it spoken with sorrow) reduced to a narrow state, which he embraces without repining, and still shows the beauty of his mind by so liberal a hand, as if this were an age in which to-morrow were to care for itself. I have taken a pleasure in giving the reader a short, but true character of this good man, my friend, from whom I received this following relation:—He sent to Mr. Donne, and entreated to borrow an hour of his time for a conference the next day. After their meeting, there was not many minutes passed before he spake to Mr. Donne to this purpose:—"Mr. Donne, the occasion of sending for you is to propose to you what I have often revolved in my own thought since I last saw you, which nevertheless I will not declare but upon this condition, that you shall not return me a present answer, but forbear three days, and bestow some part of that time in fasting and prayer, and after a serious consideration of what I shall propose, then return to me with your answer. Deny me not, Mr. Donne, for it is the effect of a true love, which I would gladly pay as a debt due for yours to me."

This request being granted, the doctor expressed himself thus:—"Mr. Donne, I know your education and abilities; I know your expectation of a state employment, and I know your fitness for it, and I know too the many delays and contingencies that attend court promises; and let me tell you, that my love, begot by our long friendship and your merits, hath prompted me to such an inquisition after your present temporal estate, as makes me no stranger to your necessities, which I know to be such as your generous spirit could not bear, if it were not supported with a pious patience: you know I have formerly persuaded you to wave your court hopes, and enter into holy orders: which I now again per-

by a vile death, opened the gates of life to mankind.
Make me no present answer, but remember your promise, and return to me the third day with your resolution."

At the hearing of this, Mr. Donne's faint breath and perplexed countenance gave a visible testimony of an inward conflict, but he performed his promise, and departed without returning an answer till the third day, and then his answer was to this effect :—

"My most worthy and most dear friend, since I saw you I have been faithful to my promise, and have also meditated much of your great kindness, which hath been such as would exceed even my gratitude, but that it cannot do, and more I cannot return you; and I do that with a heart full of humility and thanks, though I may not accept of your offer. But, sir, my refusal is not for that I think myself too good for that calling, for which kings, if they think so, are not good enough; nor for that my education and learning, though not eminent, may not, being assisted with God's grace and humility, render me in some measure fit for it; but I dare make so dear a friend as you are my confessor. Some irregularities of my life have been so visible to some men, that though I have, I thank God, made my peace with him by penitential resolutions against them, and by the assistance of his grace banished them my affections; yet this, which God knows to be so, is not so visible to man, as to free me from their censures, and it may be, that sacred calling from a dishonour. And besides, whereas it is determined by the best of casuists, that God's glory should be the first end, *and a maintenance the second motive to embrace that calling ; and though each man may propose to himself both together, yet the first may not be put last without a violation of conscience, which he that searches the heart will judge. And truly my present condition is such, that if I ask my own conscience whether it be reconcilable to that rule, it is at this time so perplexed about it, that I can neither give myself nor you an answer. You know, sir, who says, Happy is that man whose conscience doth not accuse him for that thing which he does. To these I might add other reasons that dissuade me ; but I crave your favour that I may forbear to express them, and thankfully decline your offer."*

This was his present resolution ; but the heart of man is not in his own keeping, and he was destined to this sacred service by a higher hand ; a hand so powerful, as at last forced him to a compliance : of which I shall give the reader an account before I shall portion with many who had made that study the employment of their whole life.

Sir Francis being dead, and that happy family dissolved, Mr. Donne took for himself a house in Mitcham (near to Croydon in Surrey), a place noted for good air and choice company. There his wife and children remained; and for himself he took lodgings in London, near to Whitehall, whither his friends and occasions drew him very often, and where he was as often visited by many of the nobility and others of this nation, who used him in their councils of greatest consideration, and with some rewards for his better subsistence. Nor did our own nobility only value and favour him, but his acquaintance and friendship was sought for by most ambassadors of foreign nations, and by many other strangers whose learning or business occasioned their stay in this nation.

He was much importuned by many friends to make his constant residence in London, but he still denied it, having settled his dear wife and children at Mitcham, and near some friends that were bountiful to them and him; for they, God knows, needed it: and that you may the better now judge of the then present condition of his mind and fortune, I shall present you with an extract collected out of some few of his many letters.

——“ And the reason why I did not send an answer to your last week's letter was, because it then found me under too great a sadness, and at present it is thus with me. There is not one person but myself well of my family: I have already lost half a child, and with that mischance of hers, my wife is fallen into such a discomposure, as would afflict her too extremely, but that the sickness of all her other children stupifies her; of one of which, in good faith, I have not much hope; and these meet with a fortune so ill provided for physic, and such relief, that if God should ease us with burials, I know not how to perform even that; but I flatter myself with this hope, that I am dying too, for I cannot waste faster than by such griefs. As for ——

“From my hospital at Mitcham,
Aug. 10. “JOHN DONNE.”

Thus did he bemoan himself: and thus in other letters:—

——“For we hardly discover a sin, when it is but an omission of some good, and no accusing act. With this or the former, I have often suspected myself to incorporated into a part of the world, as by business to contribute some sustentation to the whole. This I made account ; I began early, when I understood the study of our laws ; but was diverted by leaving that and embracing the worst voluptuousness, an hydropic immoderate desire of human learning and languages : beautiful ornaments indeed to men of great fortunes ; but mine was grown so low as to need an occupation, which I thought I entered well into, when I subjected myself to such a service as I thought might exercise my poor abilities ; and there I stumbled and fell too : and now I am become so little, or such a nothing, that I am not a subject good enough for one of my own letters. Sir, I fear my present discontent does not proceed from a good root, that I am so well content to be nothing, that is, dead. But, sir, though my fortune hath made me such, as that I am rather a sickness or a disease of the world, than any part of it, and therefore neither love it nor life ; yet I would gladly live to become some such thing as you should not repent loving me. Sir, your own soul cannot be more zealous for your good than I am ; and God, who loves that zeal in me, will not suffer you to doubt it. You would pity me now if you saw me write, for my pain hath drawn my head so much awry, and holds it so, that my eye cannot follow my pen. I therefore receive you into my prayers with mine own weary soul, and commend myself to yours. I doubt not but next week will bring you good news ; for I have either mending or dying on my side : but if I do continue longer thus, I shall have comfort in this, that my blessed Saviour, in exercising his justice upon my two worldly parts, my fortune and my body, reserves all his mercy for that which most needs it, my soul; which is, I doubt, too like a porter that is very often near the gate, and yet goes not out. Sir, I profess to you truly, that my loathness to give over writing now, seems to myself a sign that I shall write no more ——

“ Your poor friend, and God’s poor patient,
Sept. 7. “ JOHN DONNE.”

By this you have seen a part of the picture of his narrow fortune, and the perplexities of his generous mind; and thus it continued with him for about two years, all which time his family remained constantly at Mitcham, and to which place he often retired himself, and destined some days to a constant study of some points of controversy betwixt the English and Roman church, and especially those of supremacy and allegiance. And to that place, and such studies,

French king, Henry the Fourth ; and Sir Robert put on as sudden a resolution to accompany him to the French court, and to be present at his audience there. And Sir Robert put on as sudden a resolution, to subject Mr. Donne to be his companion in that journey. And this desire was suddenly made known to his wife, who was then with child, and otherwise under so dangerous a habit of body as to her health, that she professed an unwillingness to allow him any absence from her ; saying, “ Her divining soul boded her some ill in his absence,” and therefore desired him not to leave her. This made Mr. Donne lay aside all thoughts of the journey, and really to resolve against it. But Sir Robert became restless in his persuasions for it, and Mr. Donne was so generous as to think he had sold his liberty when he received so many charitable kindnesses from him, and told his wife so, who did therefore with an unwillingness give a faint consent to the journey, which was proposed to be but for two months ; for about that time they determined their return. Within a few days after this resolve, the ambassador, Sir Robert, and Mr. Donne, left London, and were the twelfth day got all safe to Paris. Two days after their arrival there, Mr. Donne was left alone in that room in which Sir Robert and he, and some other friends, had dined together. To this place Sir Robert returned within half an hour ; and as he left, so he found Mr. Donne alone, but in such an ecstasy, and so altered as to his looks, as amazed Sir Robert to behold him ; insomuch, that he earnestly desired Mr. Donne to declare what had befallen him in the short time of his absence. To which Mr. Donne was not able to make a present answer ; but after a long and perplexed pause did at last say, " I have seen a dreadful vision since I saw you ; I have seen my dear wife pass twice by me through this room, with her hair hanging about her shoulders, and a dead child in her arms : this I have seen since I saw you." To which Sir Robert replied, " Sure, sir, you have slept since I saw you, and this is the result of some melancholy dream, which I desire you to forget, for you are now awake." To which Mr. Donne's reply was, " I cannot be surer that I now live, than that I have not slept since I saw you ; and I am as sure, that at her second appearance she stopped and looked me in the face, and vanished." Rest and sleep had not altered Mr. Donne's opinion the next day ; for he then affirmed this vision with a more deliberate, and so confirmed a confidence, that he inclined Sir Robert to a faint belief that the vision was true. It is truly said, that desire and doubt have it well may, for most of our world are at present possessed with an opinion, that visions and miracles are ceased. And though it is most certain, that two lutes, being both strung and tuned to an equal pitch, and then one played upon, the other, that which is not touched, being laid upon a table at a fit distance, will (like an echo to a trumpet) warble a faint audible harmony in answer to the same tune, yet many will not believe there is any such thing as a sympathy of souls; and I am well pleased that every reader do enjoy his own opinion: but if the unbelieving will not allow the believing reader of this story a liberty to believe that it may be true, then I wish him to consider, many wise men have believed that the ghost of Julius Cæsar did appear to Brutus, and that both St. Austin, and Monica his mother, had visions in order to his conversion. And though these, and many others (too many to name), have but the authority of human story, yet the incredible reader may find in the sacred story (1 Sam. xxviii.), that Samuel did appear to Saul even after his death (whether really or not, I undertake not to determine). And Bildad<sup>1</sup>, in the book of Job (chap. iv.), says these words:—"A spirit passed before my face; the hair of my head stood up; fear and trembling came upon me, and made all my bones to shake." Upon which words I will make no comment, but leave them to be considered by the incredulous reader, to whom I also commend this following consideration:—that there be many pious and learned men that believe our merciful God hath assigned to every man a particular guardian angel, to be his constant monitor, and to attend him in all his dangers both of body and soul. And the opinion, that every man hath his particular angel, may gain some authority by the relation of St. Peter's miraculous deliverance out of prison (Acts xii.), not by many, but by one angel. And this belief, may yet gain more credit by the reader's considering, that when Peter, after his enlargement, knocked at the door of Mary, the mother of John, and Rhoda, the maid-servant, being surprised with joy that Peter was there, did not let him in, but ran in haste and told the disciples (who were then and there met together) that Peter was at the door, and they not believing it, said she was mad; yet when she again affirmed it, though they believed it not, yet they concluded and said, "It is his angel."

<sup>1</sup> Walton should have said Eliphaz.

More observations of this nature, and inferences from them, might be made to gain the relation a firmer belief; but I forbear, lest I, that intended to be with commending to his view a copy of verses given by Mr. Donne to his wife at the time that he then parted from her: and I beg leave to tell, that I have heard some critics, learned both in languages and poetry, say, that none of the Greek or Latin poets did ever equal them.

A VALEDICTION, FORBIDDING TO MOURN.

As virtuous men pass mildly away,
And whisper to their souls to go,
While some of their sad friends do say,
The breath goes now, and some say—No.

So let us melt and make no noise;
No wind-sighs or tear-floods us move:
’Twere profanation of our joys
To tell the laity our love.

Movings of the earth cause harms and fears;
Men reckon what they did or meant;
But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent.

Dull sublunary lovers’ love (Whose soul is sense) cannot admit Absence, because that doth remove Those things that elemented it.

But we by a soul so much refined,
That our souls know not what it is,
Inter-assured of the mind,
Care not hands, eyes, or lips to miss.

Our two souls therefore, which are one,
Though I must go, endure not yet
A breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat.

If we be two, we are two so
As stiff twin-compasses are two :
Thy soul, the fix'd foot, makes no show
To move, but does if th' other do.

And though thine in the centre sit,
Yet, when my other far does roam,
Thine leans and hearkens after it,
And grows erect as mine comes home.

Such thou must be to me, who must,
Like th' other foot, obliquely run :
Thy firmness makes my circle just,
And me to end where I begun.

I return from my account of the vision, to tell the reader that both before Mr. Donne's going into France, at his being there, and after his return, many of the nobility and others that were powerful at court, were watchful and solicitous to the king for some secular employment for him. The king had formerly both known and put a value upon his company; and had also given him some hopes of a state employment concerned the oath of supremacy and allegiance, in which the king had appeared and engaged himself by his public writings now extant. And his majesty discoursing with Mr. Donne, concerning many of the reasons which are usually urged against the taking of those oaths, apprehended such a validity and clearness in his stating the questions, and his answers to them, that his majesty commanded him to bestow some time in drawing the arguments into a method, and then to write his answers to them; and having done that, not to send, but be his own messenger, and bring them to him. To this he presently and diligently applied himself, and within six weeks brought them to him, under his own handwriting, as they be now printed; the book bearing the name of "Pseudo-Martyr," printed anno 1610.

When the king had read and considered that book, he persuaded Mr. Donne to enter into the ministry; to which at that time he was, and appeared very unwilling, apprehending it (such was his mistaken modesty) to be too weighty for his abilities: and though his majesty had promised him a favour, and many persons of worth mediated with his majesty for some secular employment for him (to which his education had adapted him), and particularly the Earl of Somerset, when in his greatest height of favour; who being then at Theobald's with the king, where one of the clerks of the council died that night; the earl posted a messenger for Mr. Donne to come to him immediately, and, at Mr. Donne's coming, said, "Mr. Donne, to testify the reality of my affection, and my purpose to prefer you, stay in this garden till I go up to the king and bring you word that you are clerk of the council : doubt not my doing this, for I know the king loves you, and know the king will not deny me." But the king gave a positive denial to all requests ; and having a discerning spirit, replied, " I know Mr. Donne is a learned man, has the abilities of a learned divine, and will prove a powerful preacher, and my desire is to prefer him that way, and in that way I will deny you nothing for him." After that time, as he professeth in his book of Devotions, " the king descended to a persuasion, almost to a solicitation, of him to enter into sacred orders ;" which though he then denied not, yet he deferred it for almost three years. All which time he applied himself to an incessant study of textual divinity, and to the attainment of a greater perfection in the learned languages, Greek and Hebrew.

In the first and most blessed times of Christianity, when the clergy were looked upon with reverence, and deserved it, when they overcame their opposers

the strictness of life and competency of learning required in such as enter into sacred orders; and doubtless, considering his own demerits, did humbly ask God with St. Paul, "Lord, who is sufficient for these things?" and with meek Moses, "Lord, who am I?" And sure, if he had consulted with flesh and blood, he had not for these reasons put his hand to that holy plough. But God, who is able to prevail, wrestled with him as the angel did with Jacob, and marked him; marked him for his own; marked him with a blessing, a blessing of obedience to the motions of his blessed Spirit. And then, as he had formerly asked God with Moses, "Who am I?" so now, being inspired with an apprehension of God's particular mercy to him in the king's and others' solicitations of him, he came to ask King David's thankful question, "Lord, who am I, that thou art so mindful of me?" So mindful of me, as to lead me for more than forty years through this wilderness of the many temptations and various turnings of a dangerous life; so merciful to me, as to move the learnedst of kings to descend to move me to serve at the altar; so merciful to me, as at last to move my heart to embrace this holy motion:—Thy motions I will and do embrace:—and now I say with the blessed Virgin, "Be it with thy servant as seemeth best in thy sight;" and so, blessed Jesus, I do take the cup of salvation, and will call upon thy name, and will preach thy gospel.

Such strifes as these St. Austin had, when St. Ambrose endeavoured his conversion to Christianity, with which he confessed he acquainted his friend Alipius. Our learned author (a man fit to write after no mean copy) did the like. And declaring his intentions to his dear friend Dr. King, then bishop of London, a man famous in his generation, and no stranger to Mr. Donne's abilities,—(for he had been chaplain to the lord chancellor at the time of Mr. Donne's being his lordship's secretary);—that reverend man did receive the news with much gladness; and, after some expressions of joy, and a persuasion to be constant in his pious purpose, he proceeded with all convenient speed, to ordain him first deacon, and then priest not long after.

Now the English church had gained a second St. Austin, for I think none was so like him before his conversion; none so like St. Ambrose after it: and if his youth had the infirmities of the one, his age had the excellences of the other; the learning and holiness of both.

And now all his studies, which had been occasionally diffused, were all concentrated in divinity. Now he had a new calling, new thoughts, and a new employment.

than he could be to enjoy the noblest of all temporal employments."

Presently after he entered into his holy profession, the king sent for him, and made him his chaplain in ordinary, and promised to take a particular care for his preferment.

And though his long familiarity with scholars and persons of greatest quality was such as might have given some men boldness enough to have preached to any eminent auditory ; yet his modesty in this employment was such that he could not be persuaded to it, but went, usually accompanied with some one friend, to preach privately in some village not far from London ; his first sermon being preached at Paddington : this he did till his majesty sent and appointed him a day to preach to him at Whitehall ; and though much was expected from him, both by his majesty and others, yet he was so happy (which few are) as to satisfy and exceed their expectations ; preaching the word so as showed his own heart was possessed with those very thoughts and joys that he laboured to distil into others : a preacher in earnest, weeping sometimes for his auditory, sometimes with them ; always preaching to himself like an angel from a cloud, but in none ; carrying some, as St. Paul was, to heaven in holy raptures, and enticing others by a sacred art and courtship to amend their lives : here picturing a vice so as to make it ugly to those that practised it, and a virtue so as to make it be beloved even by those that loved it not ; and all this with a most particular grace and an inexpressible addition of comeliness.

There may be some that may incline to think (such indeed as have not heard him), that my affection to my friend hath transported me to an immoderate commendation of his preaching: if this meets with any such, let me entreat, though I will omit many, yet that they will receive a double witness for what I say, it being attested by a gentleman of worth (Mr. Chidley, a frequent hearer of his sermons), in part of a funeral elegy wrote by him on Dr. Donne; and is a known truth though it be in verse.

..... Each altar had his fire . . . .
He kept his love but not his object. Wit
He did not banish, but transplanted it;
Taught it both time and place, and brought it home
To PIETY, which it doth best become.
For say, had ever pleasure such a dress?
Have you seen crimes so shaped, or loveliness
Such as his lips did clothe religion in?
Had not reproof a beauty passing sin?
Corrupted Nature sorrow'd that she stood
So near the danger of becoming good.
And when he preach'd she wish'd her ears exempt

vice-chancellor, who, knowing him to be the author of that learned book the "Pseudo-Martyr," required no other proof of his abilities, but proposed it to the university, who presently assented, and expressed a gladness that they had such an occasion to entitle him to be theirs.

His abilities and industry in his profession were so eminent, and he so known and so beloved by persons of quality, that within the first year of his entering into sacred orders he had fourteen advowsons of several benefices presented to him; but they were in the country, and he could not leave his beloved London, to which place he had a natural inclination, having received both his birth and education in it, and there contracted a friendship with many, whose conversation multiplied the joys of his life: but an employment that might affix him to that place would be welcome, for he needed it.

Immediately after his return from Cambridge his wife died<sup>1</sup>, leaving him a man of a narrow unsettled estate, and (having buried five) the careful father of seven children then living, to whom he gave a voluntary assurance never to bring them under the subjection of a step-mother; which promise he kept most faithfully, burying with his tears all his earthly joys in his most dear and deserving wife's grave<sup>2</sup>, and betook himself to a most retired and solitary life.

<sup>1</sup> Mrs. Donne died August 15, 1617, on the seventh day after the birth of her twelfth child, and was buried in the parish church of St. Clement Danes, near Temple Bar.

<sup>2</sup> It appears that Nicholas Stone, a noted statuary in the reign of James I. made a tomb for Mrs. Donne, to be placed in the

In this retiredness, which was often from the sight of his dearest friends, he became crucified to the world, and all those vanities, those imaginary pleasures that are daily acted on that restless stage; and they were as perfectly crucified to him. Nor is it hard to think (being passions which may be both changed and heightened by accidents) but that that abundant affection which once was betwixt him and her, who had long church of St. Clement Danes, for the which he had fifteen pieces. (Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting, &c. vol. ii. p. 44.) The following is the inscription on her tomb:

ANNÆ

GEORGI	}	{	MORE de	}	Filiæ,
ROBERTI			Lothesley		Sorori,
WILIELMI			Equitum		Nepti,
CHRISTOPHERI			Aurator.		Pronepti

Feminae lectissimæ, dilectissimæque,
 Conjugi charissimæ, castissimæque,
 Matri piissimæ, indulgentissimæque,
 XV annis in conjugio transactis,
 VII post XII partum (quorum VII

e delight of his eyes and the companion of his her with whom he had divided so many pleasant and contented fears, as common people are able of; not hard to think but that she, being moved by death, a commensurable grief took as session of him as joy had done; and so indeed for now his very soul was elemented of nothingness, now grief took so full a possession of his as to leave no place for joy; if it did, it was as he alone, where, like a pelican in the wilderness might bemoan himself without witness or it, and pour forth his passions like Job in the his affliction, "Oh that I might have the desire heart! Oh that God would grant the thing that for!" For then, as the grave is become her so I would hasten to make it mine also, that we might there make our beds together in the dark. as the Israelites sat mourning by the rivers of n, when they remembered Sion; so he gave ease to his oppressed heart by thus venting his s: thus he began the day, and ended the night; the restless night and began the weary day in ations. And thus he continued till a consideration of his new engagements to God, and St. Paul's is me if I preach not the gospel," dispersed those clouds that had then benighted his hopes, and now him to behold the light.

first motion from his house was to preach his beloved wife lay buried (in St. Clement's h, near Temple Bar, London), and his text was of the prophet Jeremiah's Lamentation: "Lo, he man that have seen affliction."

And indeed his very words and looks testified him to be truly such a man ; and they, with the addition of his sighs and tears, expressed in his sermon, did so work upon the affections of his hearers, as melted and moulded them into a companionable sadness, and so they left the congregation ; but then their houses presented them with objects of diversion, and his presented him with nothing but fresh objects of sorrow, in beholding many helpless children, a narrow fortune, and a consideration of the many cares and casualties that attend their education.

In this time of sadness he was importuned by the grave benchers of Lincoln's Inn (who were once the companions and friends of his youth), to accept of their lecture, which, by reason of Dr. Gataker's removal from thence, was then void ; of which he accepted, being most glad to renew his intermitted friendship with those whom he so much loved, and where he had been a Saul, though not to persecute Christianity, or to divide it, yet in his irregular and apart and newly furnished for him with all necessities, other courtesies were also daily added; indeed, so many, and so freely, as if they meant their gratitude should exceed his merits: and in this love-strife of desert and liberality, they continued for the space of two years, he preaching faithfully and constantly to them, and they liberally requiting him. About which time the emperor of Germany died, and the palsgrave, who had lately married the Lady Elizabeth, the king's only daughter, was elected and crowned king of Bohemia; the unhappy beginning of many miseries in that nation.

King James, whose motto (Beati pacifici) did truly speak the very thoughts of his heart, endeavoured first to prevent, and after to compose the discords of that discomposed state; and amongst other his endeavours, did then send the Lord Hay, Earl of Doncaster, his ambassador to those unsettled princes; and by a special command from his majesty, Dr. Donne was appointed to assist and attend that employment to the princes of the union; for which the earl was most glad, who had always put a great value on him, and taken a great pleasure in his conversation and discourse: and his friends of Lincoln's Inn were as glad; for they feared that his immoderate study, and sadness for his wife's death, would, as Jacob said, "make his days few," and respecting his bodily health, "evil" too; and of this there were many visible signs.

At his going he left his friends of Lincoln's Inn, and they him with many reluctations; for though he could not say as St. Paul to his Ephesians, "Behold you to whom I have preached the kingdom of God shall from henceforth see my face no more;" yet, he believing himself to be in a consumption, questioned, and they feared it; all concluding that his troubled mind, with the help of his unintermitted studies, hastened the decays of his weak body: but God, who is the God of all wisdom and goodness, turned it to the best; for this employment (to say nothing of the event of it) did not only divert him from those too serious studies and sad thoughts, but seemed to give him a new life, by a true occasion of joy, to be an eye-witness of the health of his most dear and most honoured mistress, the queen of Bohemia, in a foreign nation, and to be witness of that gladness which she expressed to see him; who, having formerly known him a courtier, was much joyed to see him in a canonical habit, and more glad to be an ear-witness of his excellent and powerful preaching. About fourteen months after his departure out of England, he returned to his friends of Lincoln's Inn, with his sorrows moderated and his

for knowing you love London, I do therefore make you Dean of Paul's; and when I have dined, then do you take your beloved dish home to your study, say grace there to yourself, and much good may it do you."

Immediately after he came to his deanery, he employed workmen to repair and beautify the chapel, suffering, as holy David once vowed, "his eyes and temples to take no rest till he had first beautified the house of God."

The next quarter following, when his father-in-law, Sir George More (whom time had made a lover and admirer of him) came to pay him the conditioned sum of twenty pounds, he refused to receive it, and said, as good Jacob did, when he heard his beloved son Joseph was alive, "It is enough; you have been kind to me and mine; I know your present condition is such as not to abound, and I hope mine is or will be such as not to need it; I will therefore receive no more from you upon that contract;" and in testimony of it freely gave him up his bond.

Immediately after his admission into his deanery, the vicarage of St. Dunstan in the West, London, fell to him by the death of Dr. White, the advowson of it having been given to him long before by his honourable friend, Richard Earl of Dorset, then the patron, and confirmed by his brother, the late deceased Edward, both of them men of much honour.

By these, and other ecclesiastical endowments which fell to him about the same time, given to him formerly by the Earl of Kent, he was enabled to become charitable to the poor and kind to his friends, and to make such provision for his children, that they were not less scandalous, as relating to their or his profession and quality.

The next parliament, which was within that present year, he was chosen prolocutor to the convocation, and about that time was appointed by his majesty, his most gracious master, to preach very many occasional sermons, as at St. Paul's Cross and other places; in which employments he performed to the admiration of the representative body of the whole clergy of the nation.

He was once, and but once, clouded with the king's displeasure, and it was about this time; which was occasioned by some malicious whisperer, who told his majesty that Dr. Donne had put on the general humour of the pulpits, and was become busy in insinuating a fear of the king's inclining to popery, and a dislike of his government, and particularly for the king's then turning the evening lectures into catechising, and expounding the prayers of our Lord, and of the holy and leave him under this doubt, but sent for Donne, and required his answer to the accusation ; was so clear and satisfactory, that the king said was right glad he rested no longer under the on." When the king had said this, Dr. Donne l down and thanked his majesty, and protested ver was faithful and free from all collusion, and re " desired that he might not rise, till, as in ses he always had from God, so he might have is majesty some assurance that he stood clear ir in his opinion." At which the king raised om his knees with his own hands, and " protested eved him, and that he knew he was an honest und doubted not but that he loved him truly." aving thus dismissed him, he called some lords concil into his chamber, and said with much tness, " My doctor is an honest man ; and, my I was never better satisfied with an answer than h now made me ; and I always rejoice when c that by my means he became a divine."

was made dean in the fiftieth year of his age, his fifty-fourth year a dangerous sickness seized which inclined him to a consumption. But God, thankfully acknowledged, preserved his spirit, p't his intellectuals as clear and perfect as when ickness first seized his body ; but it continued nd threatened him with death, which he dreaded his distemper of body, his dear friend, Dr. Henry (then chief residentiary of that church, and late of Chichester), a man generally known by the of this nation, and as generally noted for his obliging nature, visited him daily, and observing that his sickness rendered his recovery doubtful, he chose a seasonable time to speak to him to this purpose :

“ Mr. Dean, I am by your favour no stranger to your temporal estate, and you are no stranger to the offer lately made us, for the renewing a lease of the best prebends corps belonging to our church, and you know it was denied, for that our tenant being very rich, offered to fine at so low a rate as held not proportion with his advantages ; but I will either raise him to a higher sum, or procure that the other residentiaries shall join to accept of what was offered : one of these I can and will by your favour do without delay, and without any trouble either to your body or mind. I beseech you to accept of my offer ; for I know it will be a considerable addition to your present estate, which I know needs it.”

To this, after a short pause, and raising himself upon his bed, he made this reply :

“ My most dear friend, I most humbly thank you our times abound with men that are busy and litigious about trifles and church ceremonies, and yet so far from scrupling sacrilege, that they make not so much as a query what it is: but I thank God I have; and dare not now upon my sick-bed, when Almighty God hath made me useless to the service of the church, make any advantages out of it. But if he shall again restore me to such a degree of health as again to serve at his altar, I shall then gladly take the reward which the bountiful benefactors of this church have designed me; for God knows my children and relations will need it; in which number my mother (whose credulity and charity has contracted a very plentiful to a very narrow estate) must not be forgotten: but, Doctor King, if I recover not, that little worldly estate that I shall leave behind me (that very little when divided into eight parts) must, if you deny me not so charitable a favour, fall into your hands as my most faithful friend and executor, of whose care and justice I make no more doubt than of God's blessing on that which I have conscientiously collected for them, but it shall not be augmented on my sick-bed; and this I declare to be my unalterable resolution."

The reply to this was only a promise to observe his request.

Within a few days his distempers abated, and as his strength increased, so did his thankfulness to Almighty God, testified in his most excellent Book of Devotions, which he published at his recovery; in which the reader may see the most secret thoughts that then possessed his soul paraphrased and made public; a book that may not unfitly be called a Sacred Picture of Spiriti-

tual Ecstasies, occasioned and applicable to the emergencies of that sickness; which book, being a composition of meditations, disquisitions, and prayers, he writ on his sick-bed; herein imitating the holy patriarchs, who were wont to build their altars in that place where they had received their blessings.

This sickness brought him so near to the gates of death, and he saw the grave so ready to devour him, that he would often say his recovery was supernatural: but that God, that then restored his health, continued it to him till the fifty-ninth year of his life, and then in August, 1630, being with his eldest daughter, Mrs. Harvey, at Abury Hatch in Essex, he there fell into a fever, which, with the help of his constant infirmity (vapours from the spleen), hastened him into so visible a consumption, that his beholders might say, as St. Paul of himself, "He dies daily;" and he might say with Job, "My welfare passeth away as a cloud; the days of my affliction have taken hold of me, and weary nights are appointed justifying it ; and though his wife's competent years, and others reasons, might be justly urged to moderate severe censures, yet he would occasionally condemn himself for it. And doubtless it had been attended with a heavy repentance, if God had not blessed them with so mutual and cordial affections, as in the midst of their sufferings made their bread of sorrow taste more pleasantly than the banquets of dull and low-spirited people.

The recreations of his youth were poetry ; in which he was so happy, as if Nature and all her varieties had been made only to exercise his sharp wit and high fancy ; and in those pieces which were facetiously composed and carelessly scattered (most of them being written before the twentieth year of his age), it may appear by his choice metaphors, that both nature and all the arts joined to assist him with their utmost skill.

It is a truth, that in his penitential years, viewing some of those pieces that had been loosely (God knows too loosely) scattered in his youth, he wished they had been abortive, or so short-lived, that his own eyes had witnessed their funerals. But though he was no friend to them, he was not so fallen out with heavenly poetry as to forsake that, no, not in his declining age, witnessed then by many divine sonnets, and other high, holy, and harmonious compositions ; yea, even on his former sick bed, he wrote this heavenly hymn, expressing the great joy that then possessed his soul in the assurance of God's favour to him when he composed it.

A HYMN TO GOD THE FATHER.

WILT thou forgive that sin where I begun,
Which was my sin, though it were done before?
Wilt thou forgive that sin through which I run,
And do run still, though still I do deplore?
When thou hast done thou hast not done,
For I have more.

Wilt thou forgive that sin, which I have won
Others to sin, and made my sin their door?
Wilt thou forgive that sin which I did shun
A year or two, but wallow'd in a score?
When thou hast done thou hast not done,
For I have more.

I have a sin of fear, that when I've spun
My last thread, I shall perish on the shore:
But swear by thyself, that at my death thy Son
Shall shine as he shines now, and heretofore;
And having done that, thou hast done,
I fear no more.

I have rather mentioned this hymn, for that he caused it to be set to a most grave and solemn tune, and to be often sung to the organ by the choristers of St. Paul's church in his own hearing, especially at the evening service, and at his return from his customary devotions in that place, did occasionally say to a friend, "The words of this hymn have restored to me the same thoughts of joy that possessed my soul in my sickness when I composed it. And, O the power of church-music! That harmony added to this hymn has raised the affections of my heart, and quickened my graces of zeal and gratitude; and I observe that I always return from paying this public duty of prayer and praise to God, with an unexpressible tranquillity of mind, and a willingness to leave the world."

After this manner did the disciples of our Saviour, and the best of Christians in those ages of the church nearest to his time, offer their praises to Almighty God; and the readers of St. Augustine's life may there find, that towards his dissolution he wept abundantly, that the enemies of Christianity had broke in upon them, and profaned and ruined their sanctuaries, and because their public hymns and lauds were lost out of their churches. And after this manner have many devout souls lifted up their hands and offered acceptable sacrifices unto Almighty God where Dr. Donne offered his, and now lies buried. "But now, O Lord, how is that place become desolate!" Anno 1656.

Before I proceed further, I think fit to inform the reader, that not long before his death he caused to be drawn a figure of the body of Christ, extended upon an anchor, like those which painters draw when they would present us with the picture of Christ crucified on the cross; his varying no otherwise, than to affix him not to a cross, but to an anchor (the emblem of hope); this he caused to be drawn in little, and then many of those figures thus drawn to be engraven very small in Heliotropium stones *, and set in gold, and of those he sent to many of his dearest friends, to be used as seals or rings, and kept as memorials of him, and his affection to them.

* The seal given to Walton is now in the possession of Mr. H. A. Merryweather; another is in the possession of Rev. Dr. Bliss, registrar of the University of Oxford; a third is figured in the Gents. Mag.

His dear friends and benefactors, Sir Henry Goodier, and Sir Robert Drewry, could not be of that number, nor could the Lady Magdalen Herbert, the mother of George Herbert, for they had put off mortality, and taken possession of the grave before him; but Sir Henry Wotton and Dr. Hall, the then late deceased bishop of Norwich, were; and so were Dr. Duppa, bishop of Salisbury, and Dr. Henry King, bishop of Chichester (lately deceased); men in whom there was such a commixture of general learning, of natural eloquence, and Christian humility, that they deserve a commemoration by a pen equal to their own, which none have exceeded.

And in this enumeration of his friends, though many must be omitted, yet that man of primitive piety, Mr. George Herbert, may not; I mean that George Herbert who was the author of "The Temple,"

dear friendship, made up by such a sympathy of inclinations, that they coveted and joyed to be in each other's company; and this happy friendship was still maintained by many sacred endearments, of which that which followeth may be some testimony.

TO MR. GEORGE HERBERT,

SENT HIM WITH ONE OF MY SEALS OF THE ANCHOR

AND CHRIST.

A sheaf of snakes used heretofore to be my seal, which is the crest of our poor family.

Qui prius assuetus serpentum falce tabellas
Signare, hæc nostræ symbola parva domûs Adscitus domui domini.

Adopted in God's family, and so
My old coat lost, into new arms I go.
The cross my seal in baptism spread below,
Does by that form into an anchor grow.
Crosses grow anchors, bear as thou shouldst do Thy cross, and that cross grows an anchor too.
But he that makes our crosses anchors thus,
Is Christ, who there is crucified for us.
Yet with this I may my first serpents hold (God gives new blessings, and yet leaves the old);
The serpent may, as wise, my pattern be,
My poison, as he feeds on dust, that's me.
And, as he rounds the earth to murder, sure
He is my death, but on the cross my cure.
Crucify nature then; and then implore
All grace from him, crucified there before.
When all is cross, and that cross anchor grown,
This seal's a catechism, not a seal alone.

Under that little seal great gifts I send,
 Both works and prayers, pawns and fruits of a friend.
 O may that saint that rides on our great seal,
 To you that bear his name large bounty deal.

JOHN DONNE.

IN SACRAM ANCHORAM PISCATORIS,

GEORGE HERBERT.

Quòd Crux nequibat fixa clavique additi, Tenere Christum scilicet ne ascenderet, Tuive Christum . . . . .

Although the cross could not Christ here detain,
 When nail'd unto't, but he ascends again ;
 Nor yet thy eloquence here keep him still,
 But only whilst thou speak'st, this anchor will :
 Nor canst thou be content, unless thou to This certain anchor add a seal, and so

A HYMN TO GOD MY GOD,
IN MY SICKNESS, MARCH 23, 1630.

SINCE I am coming to that holy room,
Where, with thy quire of saints for evermore
I shall be made thy music, as I come
I tune my instrument here at the door,
And what I must do then, think here before.

Since my physicians by their loves are grown Cosmographers; and I their map, who lie Flat on this bed . . . . .
. . . . .

So, in his purple wrapt, receive me, Lord!
By these his thorns, give me his other crown:
And, as to other souls I preach'd thy word,
Be this my text, my sermon to mine own,
"That he may raise, therefore the Lord throws down."

If these fall under the censure of a soul, whose too ch mixture with earth makes it unfit to judge of se high raptures and illuminations, let him know, t many holy and devout men have thought the d of Prudentius to be most refined, when, not ny days before his death, "he charged it to present God each morning and evening with a new and ritual song;" justified by the example of king vid, and the good king Hezekiah, who, upon the ovation of his years, paid his thankful vows to nighty God in a royal hymn, which he concludes these words, "The Lord was ready to save, there-e I will sing my songs to the stringed instruments
the days of my life in the temple of my God."

The latter part of his life may be said to be a continued study; for as he usually preached once a week, if not oftener, so after his sermon he never gave his eyes rest till he had chosen out a new text, and that night cast his sermon into a form, and his text into divisions; and the next day betook himself to consult the fathers, and so commit his meditations to his memory, which was excellent. But upon Saturday he usually gave himself and his mind a rest from the weary burthen of his week's meditations, and usually spent that day in visitation of friends, or some other diversions of his thoughts; and would say, "that he gave both his body and mind that refreshment, that he might be enabled to do the work of the day following not faintly, but with courage and cheerfulness."

Nor was his age only so industrious, but in the most unsettled days of his youth, his bed was not able to detain him beyond the hour of four in a morning: and it was no common business that drew ger days, which alone might declare him then perfect in the civil and canon law, but in many ch studies and arguments, as enter not into the ation of many that labour to be thought great and pretend to know all things.

were these only found in his study, but all es that passed of any public consequence, 1 this or any of our neighbour-nations, he ted either in Latin, or in the language of that und kept them by him for useful memorials. id the copies of divers letters and cases of ce that had concerned his friends, with his ions and solutions of them, and divers other es of importance, all particularly and methodi-ested by himself.

id prepare to leave the world before life left king his will when no faculty of his soul was or made defective by pain or sickness, or he d by a sudden apprehension of death; but it le with mature deliberation, expressing himself rtial father, by making his children's portions nd a lover of his friends, whom he remem-ith legacies fitly and discreetly chosen and ed. I cannot forbear a nomination of some , for methinks they be persons that seem to e a recordation in this place; as namely, to her-in-law, Sir Thomas Grimes, he gave that clock which he had long worn in his pocket; ar friend and executor, Dr. King (late bishop hester), that model of gold of the Synod of ith which the States presented him at his last ; the Hague; and the two pictures of Padre

Paolo and Fulgentio, men of his acquaintance when he travelled Italy, and of great note in that nation for their remarkable learning; to his ancient friend, Dr. Brook (that married him), master of Trinity College in Cambridge, he gave the picture of the Blessed Virgin and Joseph; to Dr. Winniff (who succeeded him in his deanery) he gave a picture called the "Skeleton;" to the succeeding dean, who was not then known, he gave many necessities of worth, and useful for his house, and also several pictures and ornaments for the chapel, with a desire that they might be registered, and remain as a legacy to his successors; to the earls of Dorset and Carlisle he gave several pictures, and so he did to many other friends; legacies given rather to express his affection than to make any addition to their estates: but unto the poor he was full of charity, and unto many others, who, by his constant and long-continued bounty, might entitle themselves to be his alms-people; for do hereby make my last Will and Testament, in the manner and form following:—

First, I give my gracious God an entire sacrifice of body and soul, with my most humble thanks for that assurance which his blessed Spirit imprints in me now of the salvation of the one, and the resurrection of the other; and for that constant and cheerful resolution which the same Spirit hath established in me to live and die in the religion now professed in the Church of England. In expectation of that resurrection, I desire my body may be buried in the most private manner that may be, in that place of St. Paul's Church, London, that the now Residentiaries have at my request designed for that purpose, &c. And this my last Will and Testament, made in the fear of God (whose mercy I humbly beg, and constantly rely upon in Jesus Christ), and in perfect love and charity with all the world (whose pardon I ask, from the lowest of my servants to the highest of my superiors), written all with my own hand, and my name subscribed to every page, of which there are five in number.

Sealed Decemb. 13, 1630.

Nor was this blessed sacrifice of charity expressed only at his death, but in his life also, by a cheerful and frequent visitation of any friend whose mind was dejected, or his fortune necessitous. He was inquisitive after the wants of prisoners, and redeemed many from prison that lay for their fees or small debts; he was a continual giver to poor scholars, both of this and foreign nations. Besides what he gave with his own hand, he usually sent a servant, or a discreet and trusty friend, to distribute his charity to all the prisons in London, at all the festival times of the year, especially at the birth and resurrection of our Saviour. He gave a hundred pounds at one time to an old friend, whom he had known live plentifully, and by a too liberal heart, and carelessness, became decayed in his estate; and when the receiving of it was denied by the gentleman, saying, "he wanted not,"—for the reader may note, that as there be some spirits so generous as to labour to conceal and endure a sad poverty, rather than expose themselves to those blushes that attend the confession of it, so there be others to whom nature and grace have afforded such sweet and compassionate souls, as to pity and prevent the distresses of mankind, which I have mentioned because of Dr. Donne's reply, whose answer was,—

"I know you want not what will sustain nature, for a little will do that: but my desire is, that you, who in stitute, but that God raised him up to prevent essities, who having sucked in the religion of nan church with her mother's milk, spent her 1 foreign countries, to enjoy a liberty in it, and his house but three months before him.

to the end it may appear how just a steward of his Lord and Master's revenue, I have fit to let the reader know, that after his e into his deanery, as he numbered his years, he foot of a private account, to which God and els were only witnesses with him) computed revenue; then, what was given to the poor er pious uses; and lastly, what rested for him
s: and having done that, he then blessed ear's poor remainder with a thankful prayer;
for that they discover a more than common n, the reader shall partake some of them in his ords:—

all is that remains this year—

“ Deo Opt. Max. benigno
Largitori, à me, et ab iis
Quibus hæc à me reservantur, Gloria et gratia in æternum.
“ Amen.”

that this year God hath blessed me and mine

“ Multiplicatæ sunt super Nos misericordiæ tuæ, Domine.....

“ Da, Domine, ut quæ ex immensâ
Bonitate tuâ nobis elargiri

Dignatus sis, in quorumcunque
Manns devenerint, in tuam Semper cedant gloriam.

"Amen."

"In fine horum sex annorum manet—

"Quid habeo quod non accepi à Domino?

Largitur etiam ut quæ largitus est

Sua iterum fiant, bono eorum usu; ut

Quemadmodum nec officiis hujus mundi,

Nec loci in quo me posuit dignitati, nec

Servis, nec egenis, in toto hujus anni

Curriculo mihi conscius sum me defuisse;

Ita et liberi, quibus quæ supersunt,

Supersunt, grato animo ea accipiant,

Et beneficium authorem recognoscant.

"Amen."

But I return from my long digression. We left the author sick in Essex, where he was forced to spend much of that winter, by reason of his disability to remove from that place; and having never for almost twenty years omitted his personal attendance

after, that I am so much the oftener at my rs, in which I shall never leave out your happi-
and I doubt not, among his other blessings, God add some one to you for my prayers. A man almost be content to die, if there were no other it in death, to hear of so much sorrow and so good testimony from good men as I (God be ed for it) did upon the report of my death ; yet I ive it went not through all, for one writ to me, some (and he said of my friends) conceived I ot so ill as I pretended, but withdrew myself to it ease, discharged of preaching. It is an un-ly, and, God knows, an ill-grounded interpretafor I have always been sorrier when I could reach, than any could be that could not hear me.
th been my desire, and God may be pleased to it, that I might die in the pulpit; if not that, at I might take my death in the pulpit, that is,
he sooner by occasion of those labours. Sir, e to see you presently after Candlemas, about time will fall my Lent sermon at court, except ord chamberlain believe me to be dead, and so me out of the roll ; but as long as I live, and am speechless, I would not willingly decline that ser-
I have better leisure to write than you to read,
would not willingly oppress you with too much . God so bless you and your son, as I wish to “ Your poor friend,

“ And servant in Christ Jesus,

J. DONNE.”

Before that month ended he was appointed to preach upon his old constant day, the first Friday in Lent: he had notice of it, and had in his sickness so prepared for that employment, that as he had long thirsted for it, so he resolved his weakness should not hinder his journey; he came therefore to London some few days before his appointed day of preaching. At his coming thither, many of his friends (who with sorrow saw his sickness had left him but so much flesh as did only cover his bones) doubted his strength to perform that task, and did therefore dissuade him from it, assuring him, however, it was likely to shorten his life; but he passionately denied their requests, saying, "He would not doubt that that God, who in so many weaknesses had assisted him with an unexpected strength, would now withdraw it in his last employment, professing an holy ambition to perform that sacred work." And when, to the amazement of some beholders, he appeared in the pulpit, many of them thought he presented himself, not to preach

"To God the Lord belong the issues from
 " Many that then saw his tears, and heard nt and hollow voice, professing they thought xt prophetically chosen, and that Dr. Donne reached his own funeral sermon.<sup>5</sup>

ing full of joy that God had enabled him to n this desired duty, he hastened to his house, which he never moved, till, like St. Stephen,
 as carried by devout men to his grave."

the next day after his sermon, his strength being wasted, and his spirits so spent as indisposed to business or to talk, a friend that had often been witness of his free and facetious discourse,
 "Why are you sad?" To whom he replied, countenance so full of cheerful gravity, as gave ony of an inward tranquillity of mind, and oul willing to take a farewell of this world, and am not sad, but most of the night past I have uined myself with many thoughts of several that have left me here, and are gone to that from which they shall not return, and that a few days I shall go hence and be no more

 And my preparation for this change is become ghtly meditation upon my bed, which my infir-s discourse was printed at London in 1633, in 4to. under nt title of "Death's Duel, or a Consolation to the Soule the Dying Life and Living Death of the Body." The rom Psalm lxxviii. 20. It is the last discourse in the lume of Dr. Donne's Sermons, and will be found at the his volume.

mities have now made restless to me: but at this present time I was in a serious contemplation of the providence and goodness of God to me—to me who am less than the least of his mercies: and looking back upon my life past, I now plainly see it was his hand that prevented me from all temporal employment, and that it was his will I should never settle or thrive till I entered into the ministry; in which I have now lived almost twenty years (I hope to his glory), and by which I most humbly thank him, I have been enabled to requite most of those friends who showed me kindness when my fortune was very low, as God knows it was; and (as it hath occasioned the expression of my gratitude) I thank God most of them have stood in need of my requital. I have lived to be useful and comfortable to my good father-in-law, Sir George More, whose patience God hath been pleased to exercise with many temporal crosses: I have maintained my own mother, whom it hath pleased God, after a plentiful fortune in her younger days, to re full of inexpressible joy, and shall die in ist here look so far back as to tell the reader, his first return out of Essex to preach his last s, his old friend and physician, Dr. Fox, a man t worth, came to him to consult his health, and sight of him, and some queries concerning his pers, he told him, "That by cordials, and ing milk twenty days together, there was a pro- y of his restoration to health:" but he passion- enied to drink it. Nevertheless Dr. Fox, who him most entirely, wearied him with sollicita- ill he yielded to take it for ten days, at the end ch time he told Dr. Fox, "He had drunk it to satisfy him than to recover his health, and e would not drink it ten days longer upon the oral assurance of having twenty years added to e; for he loved it not, and was so far from ; death, which to others was the king of terrors, e longed for the day of his dissolution."

s observed, that a desire of glory or commenda- : rooted in the very nature of man, and that of the severest and most mortified lives, though ay become so humble as to banish self-flattery, ch weeds as naturally grow there; yet they ot been able to kill this desire of glory, but ke our radical heat, it will both live and die s : and many think it should do so; and we want cred examples to justify the desire of having emory to outlive our lives: which I mention e Dr. Donne, by the persuasion of Dr. Fox, yielded at this very time to have a monument made for him; but Dr. Fox undertook not to persuade him how or what monument it should be; that was left to Dr. Donne himself.

A monument being resolved upon, Dr. Donne sent for a carver to make for him in wood the figure of an urn, giving him directions for the compass and height of it; and to bring with it a board of the just height of his body. These being got, then, without delay, a choice painter was got to be in readiness to draw his picture, which was taken as followeth:—several charcoal fires being first made in his large study, he brought with him into that place his winding-sheet in his hand; and having put off all his clothes, had this sheet put on him, and so tied with knots at his head and feet, and his hands so placed as dead bodies are usually fitted to be shrouded and put into their coffin or grave. Upon this urn he thus stood, with his eyes shut, and with so much of the sheet turned aside, as might show his lean, pale, and death-like face, which was immediately turned to a

JOHANNES DONNE

SAC THEOL. PROFESS.

POST VARIA STUDIA QUIBUS AB ANNIS TENERRIMIS

FIDELITER, NEC INFELICITER INCUBUIT;

INSTINCTU ET IMPULSU SP. SANCTI, MONITU

ET HORTATU

REGIS JACOBI, ORDINES SACROS AMPLEXUS

ANNO SUI JESU, MDCLXIV. ET SUE ÆTATIS XLII.

DECANATU HUIUS ECCLESIE INDUTUS

XXVII NOVEMBRIS, MDCXXI.

EXUTUS MORTE ULTIMO DIE MARTII MDCXXXI.

HIC LICET IN OCCIDUO CINERE ASPICIT EUM

CUJUS NOMEN EST ORIENS.

ad now having brought him through the many inths and perplexities of a various life, even to rates of death and the grave, my desire is, he rest till I have told my reader, that I have seen pictures of him in several habits, and at several and in several postures. And I now mention because I have seen one picture of him, drawn curious hand at his age of eighteen, with his
and what other adornments might then suit
the present fashions of youth, and the giddy ies of that age; and his motto then was:—

“How much shall I be changed, Before I am changed<sup>6</sup>!”

ad if that young, and his now dying picture, at this time set together, every beholder might

Antes muerta que mudada.” The words antes muerta que la are supposed by a Spanish author to have been originally n on the sand by a lady promising fidelity to her lover.
Following lines were composed by Izaak Walton, and in-say, "Lord! how much is Dr. Donne already changed, before he is changed!" And the view of them might give my reader occasion to ask himself with some amazement, "Lord! how much may I also that am now in health be changed, before I am changed, before this vile, this changeable body shall put off mortality!" and therefore to prepare for it. But this is not writ so much for my reader's memento, as to tell him, that Dr. Donne would often in his private discourses, and often publicly in his sermons, mention the many changes both of his body and mind; especially of his mind, from a vertiginous giddiness; and would as often say, "His great and most blessed change was from a temporal to a spiritual employment;" in which he was so happy, that he accounted the former part of his life to be lost, and the beginning of it to be from his first entering into sacred orders, and serving his most merciful God at his altar.

Upon Monday, after the drawing this picture, he took his last leave of his beloved study: and being took a solemn and deliberate farewell, commending to their considerations some sentences useful for the regulation of their lives, and then dismissed them, as good Jacob did his sons, with a spiritual benediction. The Sunday following he appointed his servants, that if there were any business yet undone that concerned him or themselves, it should be prepared against Saturday next, for after that day he would not mix his thoughts with any thing that concerned this world; nor ever did; but as Job, so he "waited for the appointed day of his dissolution."

And now he was so happy as to have nothing to do but to die; to do which, he stood in need of no longer time; for he had studied it long, and to so happy a perfection, that in a former sickness he called God to witness (in his Book of Devotions written then), "He was that minute ready to deliver his soul into his hands, if that minute God would determine his dissolution." In that sickness he begged of God the constancy to be preserved in that estate for ever: and his patient expectation to have his immortal soul disrobed from her garment of mortality, makes me confident, that he now had a modest assurance that his prayers were then heard, and his petition granted. He lay fifteen days earnestly expecting his hourly change, and in the last hour of his last day, as his body melted away and vapoured into spirit, his soul having, I verily believe, some revelation of the Beatifical Vision, he said, "I were miserable if I might not die;" and after those words closed many periods of his faint breath by saying often, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done." His speech, which had long been his ready and faithful servant, left him not till the last minute of his life, and then forsook him, not to serve another master, (for who speaks like him?) but died before him, for that it was then become useless to him that now conversed with God on earth, as angels are said to do in heaven, only by thoughts and looks. Being speechless, and seeing heaven by that illumination by which he saw it, he did as St. Stephen, "look stedfastly into it, till he saw the Son of Man, standing at the right hand of God his Father;" and being satisfied with this blessed sight, as his soul ascended, and his last breath departed from him, he closed his own eyes, and then disposed his hands and body into such a posture as required not the least alteration by those that came to shroud him.

Thus variable, thus virtuous, was the life; thus excellent, thus exemplary, was the death of this memorable man.

repaired, and, as Alexander the Great did to the grave of the famous Achilles, so they strewed his with an abundance of curious and costly flowers ; which course they (who were never yet known) continued morning and evening for many days, not ceasing till the stones that were taken up in that church to give his body admission into the cold earth (now his bed of rest), were again by the mason's art so levelled and firmed as they had been formerly, and his place of burial undistinguishable to common view.

The next day after his burial, some unknown friend, some one of the many lovers and admirers of his virtue and learning, writ this epitaph with a coal on the wall over his grave:—

“ Reader ! I am to let thee know, Donne's body only lies below :
For, could the grave his soul comprise,
Earth would be richer than the skies.”

Nor was this all the honour done to his reverend ashes ; for as there be some persons that will not receive a reward for that for which God accounts himself a debtor, persons that dare trust God with their charity, and without a witness ; so there was by some grateful unknown friend, that thought Dr. Donne's memory ought to be perpetuated, a hundred marks sent to his two faithful friends and executors (Dr. King and Dr. Monfort) towards the making of his monument. It was not for many years known by whom ; but, after the death of Dr. Fox, it was known that it was he that sent it : and he lived to see as lively a representation of his dead friend as marble can express; a statue indeed so like Dr. Donne, that (as his friend Sir Henry Wotton had expressed himself) "It seems to breathe faintly, and posterity shall look upon it as a kind of artificial miracle?"

He was of a stature moderately tall, of a straight and equally-proportioned body, to which all his words and actions gave an unexpressible addition of comeliness.

The melancholy and pleasant humour were in him so contempered, that each gave advantage to the other, and made his company one of the delights of mankind.

His fancy was inimitably high, equalled only by his great wit, both being made useful by a commanding judgment.

His aspect was cheerful, and such as gave a silent testimony of a clear knowing soul, and of a conscience at peace with itself.

His melting eye showed that he had a soft heart, ries, and too much a Christian not to pardon them in others.

He did much contemplate (especially after he entered into his sacred calling) the mercies of Almighty God, the immortality of the soul, and the joys of heaven ; and would often say, in a kind of sacred ecstasy, " Blessed be God that he is God, only and divinely like himself."

He was by nature passionate, but more apt to relent at the excesses of it ; a great lover of the offices of humanity, and of so merciful a spirit, that he never beheld the miseries of mankind without pity and relief.

He was earnest and unwearied in the search of knowledge, with which his vigorous soul is now satisfied, and employed in a continual praise of that God that first breathed it into his active body, that body which once was a temple of the Holy Ghost, and is now become a small quantity of Christian dust. But I shall see it reanimated.

IZ. WALTON.

Feb. 15, 1639.

VERSES TO THE MEMORY OF
DR. J. DONNE.

AN EPITAPH WRITTEN BY DOCTOR CORBET, LATE BISHOP OF OXFORD, ON HIS FRIEND,
DOCTOR DONNE.

HE that would write an epitaph for thee,
And write it well, must first begin to be Such as thou wert ; for none can truly know
Thy life and worth, but he that hath liv'd so.
He must have wit to spare, and to hurl down ;
Enough to keep the gallants of the town.
He must have learning plenty ; both the laws,
Civil and common, to judge any cause ;
Divinity great store above the rest,
Not of the last edition, but the best.
He must have language, travel, all the arts,
Judgment to use, or else he wants thy parts.
He must have friends the highest, able to do,
Such as Mæcenas, and Augustus too.
He must have such a sickness, such a death,
Or else his vain descriptions come beneath.
He that would write an epitaph for thee
Should first be dead ; let it alone for me.

TO THE MEMORY OF MY EVER DESIRED
DOCTOR DONNE.

AN ELEGY BY HENRY KING, LATE BISHOP OF CHICHESTER.

TO have liv'd eminent, in a degree
Beyond our loftiest thoughts, that is, like thee;
Or to have had too much merit is not safe,
For such excesses find no epitaph.

At common graves we have poetic eyes,
Can melt themselves in easy elegies;
Each quill can drop his tributary verse,
And pin it, like the hatchments, to the hearse;
But at thine, poem or inscription
(Rich soul of wit and language) we have none.
Indeed a silence does that tomb befit,

ELEGY ON DR. DONNE lxxxix

Il a low-pitch'd fancy can devise prove at best but hallow'd injuries.
, like the dying swan, didst lately sing
nournful dirge in audience of the king ;
a pale looks and faint accents of thy breath
nted so to life that piece of death,
it was fear'd and prophesied by all thither cam'st to preach thy funeral.
hadst thou in an elegiac knell
out unto the world thine own farewell, n thy high victorious numbers beat olemn measures of thy grieved retreat,
mightst the poet's service now have miss'd,
ell as then thou didst prevent the priest :
never to the world beholden be, ach as for an epitaph for thee.

not like the office : nor is't fit
, who didst lend our age such sums of wit, dst now reborrow from her bankrupt mine
ar to bury thee which first was thine ;
r still leave us in thy debt :—and know,
ed soul ! more glory 'tis to owe emory, what we can never pay,
with embased coin those rites defray.

ait we then thee to thyself, nor blame rooping loves, that thus to thine own fame thee executor, since but thine own n could do thee justice, nor bays crown ast deserts ; save that we nothing can e to be thy ashes' guardian.

ellers no art or metal trust
m the diamond, but the diamond's dust.

H. K.

AN ELEGY ON DOCTOR DONNE.

BY IZAAK WALTON.

OUR Donne is dead! and we may sighing say,
We had that man where Language chose to st
And show her utmost power. I would not praise
That and his great wit, which in our vain days
Make others proud; but as these served to unlock That cabinet, his mind, where such a stock
Of knowledge was reposed, that I lament
Our just and general cause of discontent.

And I rejoice I am not so severe,
But as I write a line, to weep a tear
For his decease. Such sad extremities
Can make such men as I write elegies.

And wonder not; for when so great a loss

Pictured in his sharp satires, made so foul
 That some have fear'd Sin's shapes, and kept their soul
 As far by reading verse? Did he give days,
 To last marble monuments, to those whose praise
 He would perpetuate? Did he (I fear Envy will doubt) these at his twentieth year?

But, more matured; did his rich soul conceive,
 And in harmonious holy numbers weave
 A crown of sacred sonnets, fit to adorn
 A dying martyr's brow, or to be worn
 On that bless'd head of Mary Magdalen,
 After she wiped Christ's feet, but not till then?
 Did he (fit for such penitents as she
 And he to use) leave us a Litany
 Which all devout men love, and doubtless shall,
 As times grow better, grow more classical?
 Did he write hymns, for piety and wit,
 Equal to those great grave Prudentius writ?

Spake he all languages? Knew he all laws?
 The grounds and use of physic—but, because 'Twas mercenary, waved it? went to see That happy place of Christ's nativity?
 Did he return and preach him? preach him so,
 As, since St. Paul, none ever did? they know—
 Those happy souls that heard him know this truth.
 Did he confirm thy ag'd, convert thy youth?
 Did he these wonders? and is his dear loss
 Mourn'd by so few?—few for so great a cross.

But sure the silent are ambitious all
 To be close mourners at his funeral.
 If not; in common pity they forbear,
 By repetitions, to renew our care:
 Or knowing grief conceived and hid, consumes Man's life insensibly (as poison's fumes Corrupt the brain), take silence for the way
 To enlarge the soul from these walls, mud and clay, (Materials of this body) to remain
 With him in heaven, where no promiscuous pain

Lessens those joys we have ; for with him all
Are satisfied with joys essential.

Dwell on these joys, my thoughts !—Oh ! do not call Grief back, by thinking on his funeral.
Forget he loved me : waste not my swift years
Which haste to David's seventy, fill'd with fears
And sorrows for his death : forget his parts,
They find a living grave in good men's hearts ;
And, for my first is daily paid for sin,
Forget to pay my second sigh for him :
Forget his powerful preaching ; and forget I am his convert. Oh my frailty ! let
My flesh be no more heard ; it will obtrude
This lethargy : so should my gratitude,
My vows of gratitude should be so broke,
Which can no more be, than his virtues, spoke
By any but himself : for which cause I Write no encomiums, but this elegy ;
Which, as a free-will offering, I here give Fame and the world ; and, parting with it, grieve
I want abilities fit to set forth
A monument as matchless as his worth.

IZ. WA.

TO MY OLD AND MOST WORTHY FRIEND,

MR. IZAAK WALTON,

ON HIS LIFE OF DOCTOR DONNE, &c.

WHEN, to a nation's loss, the virtuous die,
There's justly due from every hand and eye
That can, or write, or weep, an elegy.

Which though it be the poorest, cheapest way,
The debt we owe great merits, to defray,
Yet it is almost all that most men pay.

And these are monuments of so short date,
That with their birth they oft receive their fate;
Dying with those whom they would celebrate.

And though to verse great reverence is due,
Yet what most poets write proves so untrue,
It renders truth in verse suspected too.

Something more sacred then, and more entire
The memories of virtuous men require,
Than what may with their funeral-torch expire :

This history can give ; to which alone
The privilege to mate oblivion
Is granted, when denied to brass and stone.

Wherein, my friend, you have a hand so sure,
Your truths so candid are, your style so pure,
That what you write may Envy's search endure.

Your pen, disdaining to be bribed or prest,
Flows without vanity, or interest ;
A virtue with which few good pens are blest.

xciv      VERSES ADDRESSED TO

How happy was my father then ! to see Those men he loved, by him he loved, to be Rescued from frailties and mortality.

Wotton and Donne, to whom his soul was knit,
Those twins of virtue, eloquence and wit,
He saw in Fame's eternal annals writ :

Where one has fortunately found a place,
More faithful to him than his marble was,
Which eating age nor fire shall e'er deface.

A monument that, as it has, shall last
And prove a monument to that defaced ;
Itself, but with the world, not to be razed.

And even in their flowery characters,
My father's grave, part of your friendship shares ;
For you have honour'd his in strewing theirs.

Thus by an office, though particular,
Virtue's whole commonweal obliged are ;
For in a virtuous act all good men share.

And by this act, the world is taught to know,
That the true friendship we to merit owe,
Is not discharged by compliment and show.

Because they show not how th' Almighty's grace,
By various and more admirable ways,
Brought them to be the organs of his praise.

But what their humble modesty would hide,
And was by any other means denied,
Is by your love and diligence supplied.

Wotton,—a nobler soul was never bred!—
You, by your narrative's most even thread,
Through all his labyrinths of life have led ;

Through his degrees of honour and of arts,
Brought him secure from Envy's venom'd darts,
Which are still levell'd at the greatest parts ;

Through all th' employments of his wit and spirit,
Whose great effects these kingdoms still inherit,
The trials then, now trophies of his merit ;

Nay, through disgrace, which oft the worthiest have,
Thro' all state-tempests, thro' each wind and wave,
And laid him in an honourable grave.

And yours, and the whole world's beloved Donne,
When he a long and wild career had run,
To the meridian of his glorious sun ;

And being then an object of much ruth,
Led on by vanities, error, and youth,
Was long ere he did find the way to truth :

By the same clew, after his youthful swing,
To serve at his God's altar here you bring,
Where an once wanton muse doth anthems sing.

And though by God's most powerful grace alone
His heart was settled in Religion,
Yet 'tis by you we know how it was done ;

And know, that having crucified vanities
And fixt his hope, he closed up his own eyes,
And then your friend a saint and preacher dies.

The meek and learned Hooker too, almost
I' the church's ruins overwhelm'd and lost,
Is by your pen recover'd from his dust :

And Herbert ;—he, whose education,
Manners, and parts, by high applauses blown,
Was deeply tainted with Ambition,

And fitted for a court, made that his aim ;
At last, without regard to birth or name,
For a poor country cure does all disclaim ;

Where, with a soul composed of harmonies,
Like a sweet swan, he warbles as he dies
His Maker's praise, and his own obsequies.

All this you tell us, with so good success,
That our obliged posterity shall profess,
T' have been your friend, was a great happiness.

And now ! when many worthier would be proud
To' appear before you, if they were allow'd,
I take up room enough to serve a crowd :

Where to commend what you have choicely writ,
Both my poor testimony and my wit
Are equally invalid and unfit :

Yet this, and much more, is most justly due,
Were what I write as elegant as true,
To the best friend I now or ever knew.

But, my dear friend, 'tis so, that you and I,

COPY OF A LETTER WRIT TO

MR. IZAAK WALTON,

DR. HENRY KING, LORD BISHOP OF CHICHESTER.

HONEST IZAAK,

THOUGH a familiarity of more than forty years' continuance, and the constant experience of your love, even worst of the late sad times, be sufficient to endear our lship; yet, I must confess my affection much improved, only by evidences of private respect to many that know ove you, but by your new demonstration of a public, testified in a diligent, true, and useful collection of so material passages as you have now afforded me in the of venerable Mr. Hooker; of which, since desired by a friend as yourself, I shall not deny to give the testi- of what I know concerning him and his learned s; but shall first here take a fair occasion to tell you, ou have been happy in choosing to write the lives of such persons, as posterity hath just cause to honour; they will do the more for the true relation of them our happy pen: of all which I shall give you my uned censure.

shall begin with my most dear and incomparable friend Donne, late dean of St. Paul's church, who not only d me as his executor, but three days before his death, ered into my hands those excellent sermons of his, now public; professing before Dr. Winniff, Dr. Mount- and, I think, yourself, then present at his bed-side, that s by my restless importunity, that he had prepared for the press; together with which (as his best legacy) ve me all his sermon-notes, and his other papers, containing an extract of near fifteen hundred authors. How these were got out of my hands, you, who were the messenger for them, and how lost both to me and yourself, is not now seasonable to complain : but, since they did miscarry, I am glad that the general demonstration of his worth was so fairly preserved, and represented to the world by your pen in the history of his life ; indeed so well, that beside others, the best critic of our later time (Mr. John Hales, of Eton College) affirmed to me, he had not seen a life written with more advantage to the subject, or more reputation to the writer, than that of Dr. Donne's.

xcviii BISHOP OF CHICHESTER

After the performance of this task for Dr. Donne, you undertook the like office for your friend Sir Henry Wotton ; betwixt which two there was a friendship begun in Oxford ; continued in their various travels, and more confirmed in the religious friendship of age ; and doubtless this excellent person had writ the life of Dr. Donne, if death had not prevented him ; by which means his and your pre-collections for that work fell to the happy manage of your pen ; a work which you would have declined, if imperious persuasions had not been stronger than your modest resolutions against it. And I am thus far glad, that the first life was so imposed upon you, because it gave an unavoidable cause of writing the second : if not, it is too probable, we had ake into the scarce-closed wounds of a newly-bleeding-tate and church.

And, first, though I dare not say that I knew Mr. Hooker, et, as our Ecclesiastical History reports to the honour of t. Ignatius, "that he lived in the time of St. John, and had een him in his childhood," so I also joy, that in my minority have often seen Mr. Hooker with my father, who was ster Bishop of London; from whom, and others at that me, I have heard most of the material passages which ou relate in the History of his Life; and from my father-eceived such a character of his learning, humility, and ther virtues, that like jewels of invaluable price, they still ast such a lustre, as envy or the rust of time shall never arken.

From my father I have also heard all the circumstances f the plot to defame him; and how Sir Edwin Sandys atwitted his accusers, and gained their confession: and I ould give an account of each particular of that plot, but hat I judge it fitter to be forgotten, and rot in the same rave with the malicious authors.

I may not omit to declare, that my father's knowledge of Mr. Hooker was occasioned by the learned Dr. John pencer; who, after the death of Mr. Hooker, was so care-ial to preserve his invaluable sixth, seventh, and eighth ooks of "Ecclesiastical Polity," and his other writings, hat he procured Henry Jackson, then of Corpus Christi ollege, to transcribe for him all Mr. Hooker's remaining ritten papers, many of which were imperfect; for his study ad been rifled, or worse used, by Mr. Chark, and another f principles too like his. But these papers were endea-oured to be completed by his dear friend Dr. Spencer, ho bequeathed them as a precious legacy to my father, ster whose death they rested in my hand, till Dr. Abbot, hen archbishop of Canterbury, commanded them out of y custody, by authorizing Dr. John Barkeham to require, nd bring them to him to his palace in Lambeth; at which me, I have heard, they were put into the bishop's library, nd that they remained there till the martyrdom of Arch-bishop Laud; and were then, by the brethren of that fac-ion, given, with all the library, to Hugh Peters, as a reward for his remarkable service in those sad times of the church's confusion. And though they could hardly fall into a fouler hand, yet there wanted not other endeavours to corrupt and make them speak that language for which the faction then fought, which indeed was—to subject the sovereign power to the people.

But I need not strive to vindicate Mr. Hooker in this particular; his known loyalty to his prince, whilst he lived, the sorrow expressed by king James at his death, the value our late sovereign (of ever-blessed memory) put upon his works, and now the singular character of his worth by you, given in the passages of his life, especially in your appendix to it, do sufficiently clear him from that imputation. And I am glad you mention how much value Thomas Stapleton, Pope Clement the VIII. and other eminent men of the Romish persuasion, have put upon his books: having been told the same in my youth by persons of worth that have travelled Italy.

Lastly, I must again congratulate this undertaking of yours, as now more proper to you than any other person, by reason of your long knowledge and alliance to the worthy family of the Cranmers (my old friends also), who have been men of noted wisdom, especially Mr. George Cranmer, whose prudence, added to that of Sir Edwin Sandys, proved Suarez (then residing there as president of that college) with a command to answer it. And it is worth noting, that when he had perfected the work, which he calls "Defensio Fidei Catholicæ," it was transmitted to Rome for a view of the inquisitors; who, according to their custom, blotted out what they pleased, and (as Mr. Hooker hath been used since his death), added whatsoever might advance the pope's supremacy, or carry on their own interest; commonly coupling together deponere et occidere, the deposing, and then killing of princes. Which cruel and unchristian language, Mr. John Saltkield, the amanuensis to Suarez, when he wrote that answer (but since a convert, and living long in my father's house), often professed the good old man (whose piety and charity Mr. Saltkield magnified much) not only disavowed, but detested. Not to trouble you further; your reader (if according to your desire, my approbation of your work carries any weight) will here find many just reasons to thank you for it; and possibly for this circumstance here mentioned (not known to many), may happily apprehend one to thank him, who heartily wishes your happiness, and is unfeignedly,

Sir,

Your ever faithful and affectionate old friend,

HENRY CHICHESTER.

Chichester, Nov. 17, 1664.

DR. DONNE'S LETTER TO THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM.

MY HONOURED LORD,

ONCE I adventured to say to the Prince his Highness, that I was sure he would receive a book from me, the more graciously, because it was dedicated to your Grace. I proceed justly upon the same confidence that your Grace will accept this, because it is his by the same title. If I had not overcome that reluctance, which I had in myself of representing Devotions and mortifications to a young and active prince, I should not have put them into your presence, who have done so much, and have so much to do in this world; as that it might seem enough to think seriously of that. No man in the body of story is a full precedent to you, nor may any future man promise himself an adequation to his precedent, if he make you his. Kings have discerned the seeds of high virtues in many men, and upon that gold they have put their stamp, their favours upon those persons. But then those persons have laboured under the jealousy of the future heir; and some few have had the love of prince and king, but not of the kingdom, and some of that too, and not of the church. God hath united your Grace so to them

TO SIR ROBERT KARRE ciii

ing (which I hope shall be the only step of lowness that er you shall pass by, and by that late), you may receive ne remembrances from the Meditations and Devotions of Your Grace's devoutest servant,

J. DONNE.

(From Cabala, 1654, p. 315.)

R. DONNE'S LETTER TO THE HONOURABLE KNIGHT, SIR ROBERT KARRE.

SIR,

[THOUGH I have left my bed, I have not left my bedside; I sit there still, and as a prisoner discharged sits the prison door to beg fees, so sit I here to gather crumbs.
I have used this leisure to put the meditations had in my knees into some such order as may minister some holy light. They arise to so many sheets (perchance twenty), that without staying for that furniture of an epistle, that my friends importuned me to print them, I importune my hands to receive them printed. That being in hand, though this long trunk, that reaches from St. Paul's to James's, I whisper into your ear this question, whether there be any uncomeliness or unseasonableness in presenting utter of devotion or mortification to that prince whom I pray God nothing may ever mortify but holiness. If you know my purposes in general, I pray cast your eye upon the title and the epistle, and rectify me in them. I submit the substance and circumstance to you; and the poor author both,

Your very humble and very thankful

Servant in Christ Jesus,

J. DONNE.

(From Donne's Letters, 1651, p. 249.)

TO THE MOST EXCELLENT PRINCE,

PRINCE CHARLES.

MOST EXCELLENT PRINCE,

I HAVE had three births; one, natural, when I came into the world; one supernatural, when I entered into the ministry; and now, a preternatural birth, in returning to life, from this sickness. In my second birth, your Highness' royal father vouchsafed me his hand, not only to sustain me in it, but to lead me to it. In this last birth, I myself am born a father: this child of mine, this book, comes into the world, from me, and with me. And therefore, I presume (as I did the father to the father) to present the son to the son; this image of my humiliation, to the lively image of his Majesty, your Highness. It might be enough, that God hath seen my devotions: but examples of good kings are commandments; and Hezekiah writ the meditations of his sickness, after his sickness. Besides, as I have lived to see (not as a witness only, but as a partaker), the happiness of a part of your royal father's time, so shall I live (in my way) to the happiness of the times of your highness to this child of mine, inanimated by your gracious a tation, may so long preserve alive the memory of Your Highness's humblest and devotedest

JOHN DONN

STATIONES, SIVE PERIODI IN MORBO,
AD QUAS REFERUNTUR MEDITATIONES SEQUENTES.

	Page
1. INSULTUS Morbi primus. The first alteration, the first grudging of the sickness	1
2. Post, Actio læsa. The strength and the function of the senses, and other faculties, change and fail	6
3. Decubitus sequitur tandem. The patient takes his bed	10
4. Medicusque vocatur. The physician is sent for	16
5. Solus adest. The physician comes	23
6. Metuit. The physician is afraid	28
7. Socios sibi jungier instat. The physician desires to have others joined with him	36
8. Et rex ipse suum mittit. The king sends his own physician	43
9. Medicamina scribunt. Upon their consultation, they prescribe	49
10. Lentè et Serpenti satagunt occurrere Morbo. They find the disease to steal on insensibly, and endeavour to meet with it so	55
1. Nobilibusque trahunt, a cincto corde, venenum, Succis, et Gemmis; et quæ generosa, ministrant Ars, et Natura, instillant. They use cordials, to keep the venom and malignity of the disease from the heart	62
2. Spirante Columba, Supposita pedibus, revocantur ad ima vapores. They apply pigeons, to draw the vapours from the head	69

13. Atque Malum Genium, numero stignate, fassus, Page
 Pellitur ad pectus, Morbique Suburbia, Morbus.
The sickness declares the infection and malignity thereof
by spots . . . . . 75
14. Idque notant Criticis, Medici evenisse diebus.
The physicians observe these accidents to have fallen upon
the critical days . . . . . 80
15. Interea insomnes Noctes ego duco, Diesque.
I sleep not day nor night . . . . . 88
16. Et properare meum, clamant e turre propinqua
 Obstrepere Campanæ, aliorum in funere, funus.
From the bells of the church adjoining, I am daily re- membered of my burial in the funerals of others . . 94
17. Nunc lento sonitu dicunt, Morieris.
Now, this bell tolling softly for another, says to me, Thou
must die . . . . . 99 18. At inde,
 Mortuus es, sonitu celeri, pulsuque agitato.
The bell rings out, and tells me in him, that I am dead . 105
19. Oceano tandem emenso, aspicienda resurgit
 Terra; vident, justis, Medici, jam cocta mederi Se posse, indicis.
At last the physicians, after a long and stormy voyage, see land: they have so good signs of the concoction of the

DEVOTIONS.

I.

INSULTUS MORBI PRIMUS.

The first Alteration, the first Grudging of the Sickness.

I. MEDITATION.

VARIABLE, and therefore miserable condition of man! this minute I was well, and am ill this minute. I am surprised with a sudden change, and alteration to worse, and can impute it to no cause, nor call it by any name. We study health, and we deliberate upon our meats, and drink, and air, and exercises, and we hew and we polish every stone that goes to that building; and so our health is a long and regular work: but in a minute a cannon batters all, verthrows all, demolishes all; a sickness unprevented or all our diligence, unsuspected for all our curiosity, ay, undeserved, if we consider only disorder, summons us, seizes us, possesses us, destroys us in an instant. O miserable condition of man! which was not imprinted by God, who, as he is immortal himself, had put a coal, a beam of immortality into us, which we might have blown into a flame, but blew it out by our first sin; we beggared ourselves by hearkening after false riches, and infatuated ourselves by hearkening after false knowledge. So that now, we do not only die, but die upon the rack, die by the torment of sickness ; nor that only, but are preafflicted, superafflicted with these jealousies and suspicions and apprehensions of sickness, before we can call it a sickness ; we are not sure we are ill ; one hand asks the other by the pulse, and our eye asks our own urine how we do. O multiplied misery ! we die, and cannot enjoy death, because we die in this torment of sickness ; we are tormented with sickness, and cannot stay till the torment come, but preapprehensions and presages prophesy those torments, which induce that death before either come ; and our dissolution is conceived in these first changes, quickened in the sickness itself, and born in death, which bears date from these first changes. Is this the honour which man hath by being a little world, that he hath these earthquakes in himself, sudden shakings ; these lightnings, sudden flashes ; these thunders, sudden noises ; these eclipses, sudden offuscations and darkenings of his senses ; these blazing stars, sudden fiery exhalations ; these rivers of blood, sudden red waters ? Is he a world to were but mere dust and ashes, I might speak to the Lord, for the Lord's hand made me of dust, and the Lord's hand shall recollect these the Lord's hand was the wheel, upon which this of clay was framed, and the Lord's hand is the which these ashes shall be preserved. I am dust and the ashes of the temple of the Holy, and what marble is so precious? But I am less than dust and ashes: I am my best part, I am dust. And being so, the breath of God, I may give back these pious expostulations to my God: O God, my God, why is not my soul as sensible as my body? Why hath not my soul these apprehensions—these presages, these changes, those antidotes, jealousies, those suspicions of a sin, as well as my body of a sickness? Why is there not always a fire in my soul to beat at the approach of a temptation? Why are there not always waters in mine eyes to testify my spiritual sickness? I stand in the midst of temptations, naturally, necessarily; all men do so, for there is a snake in every path, temptations in every vocation; but I go, I run, I fly into the ways of temptation, which I might shun; nay, I break into places where the plague is; I press into places of temptation, and tempt the devil himself, and solicit my opportunity to tempt them who had rather be left unsolicited. I fall sick of sin, and am bedded and bedridden and putrified in the practice of sin, and all this while have no presage, no pulse, no sense of my sickness. O height, O depth of misery, where the first room of the sickness is hell, and where I never feel the fever of lust, of envy, of ambition, by any light than the darkness and horror of hell itself, where the first messenger that speaks to me doth not say, "Thou mayest die," no, nor "Thou must die," but "Thou art dead;" and where the first notice that my soul hath of her sickness, is irrecoverableness, irremediableness. But, O my God, Job did not charge thee foolishly in his temporal afflictions, nor may I in my spiritual. Thou hast imprinted a pulse in our soul, but we do not examine it; a voice in our conscience, but we do not hearken unto it. We talk it out, we jest it out, we drink it out, we sleep it out; and when we wake, we do not say with Jacob, Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not: but though we might know it, we do not, we will not. But will God pretend to make a watch, and leave out the spring? to make so many various wheels in the faculties of the soul, and in the organs of the body, and leave out grace, that should move them? Or will God make a spring, and not wind it up? Infuse his first grace, and not second it with more, without which we can no more use his first grace when we have it, than we could dispose ourselves by nature to have it? But, alas, that is not our case; we are all face to look forward to mine end, and to look ard too, to the considerations of thy mercies

I. EXPOSTULATION.

 d me from the beginning ; that so by that pracconsidering thy mercy, in my beginning in this when thou plantedst me in the Christian church,
 y mercy in the beginning in the other world,
 thou writest me in the book of life, in my elec-
 may come to a holy consideration of thy mercy beginning of all my actions here : that in all the ings, in all the accesses, and approaches of al sicknesses of sin, I may hear and hearken to oice, O thou man of God, there is death in the
 and so refrain from that which I was so hunso greedily flying to. A faithful ambassador
lth<sup>3</sup>, says thy wise servant Solomon. Thy received in the beginning of a sickness, of a true health. If I can see that light betimes, ear that voice early, Then shall my light break
as the morning, and my health shall spring
speedily<sup>4</sup>. Deliver me therefore, O my God, these vain imaginations ; that it is an overs thing, a dangerous thing, to come to that ness, that rawness, that scrupulousness, to fear concupiscence, every offer of sin, that this sus-
 s and jealous diligence will turn to an inordinate ion of spirit, and a diffidence in thy care and lence ; but keep me still established, both in a unt assurance, that thou wilt speak to me at the ing of every such sickness, at the approach of such sin ; and that, if I take knowledge of that then, and fly to thee, thou wilt preserve me falling, or raise me again, when by natural infiram fallen. Do this, O Lord, for his sake, who our natural infirmities, for he had them, and

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kings, iv. 40.

<sup>3</sup> Prov. xiii. 17.

<sup>4</sup> Isaiah, lviii. 8.

knows the weight of our sins, for he paid a dear price for them, thy Son, our Saviour, Christ Jesus. Amen.

II. ACTIO LESA.

The Strength and the Function of the Senses, and other Faculties, change and fail.

II. MEDITATION.

THE heavens are not the less constant because they move continually, because they move continually one and the same way. The earth is not the more constant because it lies still continually, because continually it changes, and melts in all the parts thereof. Man, who is the noblest part of the earth, melts so away, as if he were a statue, not of earth, but of snow. We see his own envy melts him, he grows lean with that; he will say, another's beauty melts him; but he feels that a fever doth not melt him like snow, but pour him out like lead, like iron, like brass melted in a furnace. It doth not only melt him, first attempt of the disease, I feel the victory; in the twinkling of an eye I can scarce see; instantly the taste is insipid and fatuous; instantly the appetite is dull and desireless; instantly the knees are sinking and strengthless; and in an instant, sleep, which is the picture, the copy of death, is taken away, that the original, death itself, may succeed, and that so I might have death to the life. It was part of Adam's punishment, In the sweat of thy brows thou shalt eat thy bread: it is multiplied to me; I have earned bread in the sweat of my brows, in the labour of my calling, and I have it; and I sweat again and again, from the brow to the sole of the foot, but I eat no bread, I taste no sustenance. Miserable distribution of mankind, where one half lacks meat, and the other stomach!

II. EXPOSTULATION.

DAVID professes himself a dead dog<sup>1</sup>, to his king Saul, and so doth Mephibosheth to his king David<sup>2</sup>; and yet David speaks to Saul, and Mephibosheth to David. No man is so little, in respect of the greatest man, as the greatest in respect of God; for here, in that, we have not so much as a measure to try it by; proportion is no measure for infinity. He that hath no more of this world but a grave, he that hath his grave but lent him, till a better man or another man must be buried in the same grave, he that hath no grave but a dunghill, he that hath no more earth but that which he carries, but that which he is, he that hath not that earth which he is, but even in that is another's slave, hath as much proportion to God, as if all David's worthies, and all the world's monarchs, and all imagination's giants, were kneaded and incorporated into one, and as though that one were the survivor of all the sons of men, to whom God had given the world. And therefore how little soever I be, as God calls things that are not, as though they were, I, who am as though I were not, may call upon God, and say, My God, my God, why comes thine anger so fast upon me? Why dost thou melt me, scatter me, pour me like water upon the ground so instantly? Thou stayedst for the first world, in Noah's time, one hundred and twenty years; thou stayedst for a rebellious generation in the wilderness forty years; wilt thou stay no minute for me? Wilt thou make thy process and thy decree, thy citation and thy judgment, but one act? Thy summons, thy battle, thy victory, thy triumph, all but one act; and lead me captive, nay, deliver me captive to death, as soon as thou declarest me to be enemy, and so cut me off even with the drawing of thy sword out of the scabbard, and for that question, How long was he sick? leave no other answer, but that the hand of death pressed upon him from the first minute? My God, my God, thou wast not wont to come in whirlwinds,

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sam. xxiv. 15.<sup>2</sup> 2 Sam. ix. 8.

I am fallen into the hands of God<sup>3</sup> with David, and with David I see that his mercies are great. For by that mercy, I consider in my present state, not the haste and the despatch of the disease, in dissolving this body, so much as the much more haste and despatch which my God shall use in recollecting and reuniting this dust again at the resurrection. Then I shall hear his angels proclaim the Surgite mortui; Rise, ye dead. Though I be dead, I shall hear the voice; the sounding of the voice and the working of the voice shall be all one; and all shall rise there in a less minute than any one dies here.

II. PRAYER.

O MOST gracious God, who pursuest and perfectest thine own purposes, and dost not only remember me, by the first accesses of this sickness, that I must die, but inform me, by this further proceeding therein, that I may die now; who hast not only waked me with the first, but called me up, by casting me further down, and clothed me with thyself, by stripping me of myself; and by dulling my bodily senses to the meats and eases of this world, hast whet and sharpened my spiritual senses to the apprehension of thee; by what steps and degrees soever it shall please thee to go, in the dissolution of this body, hasten, O Lord, that pace, and multiply, O my God, those degrees, in the exaltation of my soul toward thee now, and to thee then. My taste is not gone away, but gone up to sit at David's table, To taste, and see, that the Lord is good<sup>4</sup>. My stomach is not gone, but gone up, so far upwards toward the Supper of the Lamb, with thy saints in heaven, as to the table, to the communion of thy saints here in earth: my knees are weak, but weak therefore that I should easily fall to, and fix myself long upon my devotions to thee. A sound heart is the life of the flesh<sup>5</sup>; and a heart visited by thee, and directed to thee by that visitation, is a sound heart. There is no soundness in my flesh, because of thine anger<sup>6</sup>. Interpret thine own work, and call this sickness correction, and not anger, and there is soundness in my flesh. There is no rest in my bones, because of my sin<sup>7</sup>; transfer my sins, with which thou art so displeased, upon him with whom thou art so well pleased, Christ Jesus, and there will be rest in my bones. And, O my God, who madest thyself a light in a bush, in the midst of these brambles and thorns of a sharp sickness, appear unto me so that I may see thee, and know thee to be my God, applying thyself to me, even in these sharp and thorny passages. Do this, O Lord, for his sake, who was not the less the King of heaven for thy suffering him to be crowned with thorns in this world.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Sam. xxiv. 14.<sup>4</sup> Psalm xxxiv. 8.

III. DECUBITUS SEQUITUR TANDEM.

thither he must come, but because man is not to stay there, as other creatures are ; man in his natural form is carried to the contemplation of that place which is his home, heaven. This is man's prerogative ; but what state hath he in this dignity ? A fever can fling him down, a fever can depose him ; a fever can bring that head, which yesterday carried a crown of gold five feet towards a crown of glory, as low as his own foot to-day. When God came to breathe into man the breath of life, he found him flat upon the ground ; when he comes to withdraw that breath from him again, he prepares him to it by laying him flat upon his bed. Scarce any prison so close that affords not the prisoner two or three steps. The anchorites, that barked themselves up in hollow trees, and im-mured themselves in hollow walls ; that perverse man, that barrelled himself in a tub ; all could stand or sit, and enjoy some change of posture. A sick bed is a grave, and all that the patient says there is but a varying of his own epitaph. Every night's bed is a type of the grave. At night we tell our servants at what hour we will rise ; here we cannot tell ourselves at what day, what week, what month. Here the head lies as low as the foot ; the head of the people as low as they whom those feet trod upon ; and that hand that signed pardons is too weak to beg his own, if he might have it for lifting up that hand. Strange fetters to the feet, strange manacles to the hands, when the feet and hands are bound so much the faster, by how much the cords are slacker ; so much the less able to do their offices, by how much more the sinews and ligaments are the looser. In the grave I may speak through the stones, in the voice of my friends, and in the accents of those words which their love may afford my memory ; here I am mine own ghost, and rather affright my beholders than instruct them; they conceive the worst of me now, and yet fear worse; they give me for dead now, and yet wonder how I do when they awake at midnight, and ask how I do to-morrow. Miserable, and (though common to all) inhuman posture, where I must practise my lying in the grave by lying still, and not practise my resurrection by rising any more.

III. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God and my Jesus, my Lord and my Christ, my strength and my salvation, I hear thee, and I hearken to thee, when thou rebukest thy disciples, for rebuking them who brought children to thee; Suffer little children to come to me<sup>s</sup>, sayest thou. Is there a verier child than I am now? I cannot say, with thy servant Jeremy, Lord, I am a child, and cannot speak; but, O Lord, I am a sucking child, and cannot eat; a creeping child, and cannot go; how shall I come to thee? Whither shall I come to thee? To this bed? I have this weak and childish frowardness too, I cannot sit up, and yet am loath to go to bed; shall I find thee in bed? Oh it upon that; thou callest the bed tribulation, tribulation<sup>11</sup>. How shall they come to thee thou hast nailed to their bed? Thou art in congregation, and I in a solitude: when the censervant lay sick at home<sup>12</sup>, his master was come to Christ; the sick man could not. Their lay sick of the palsy<sup>13</sup>, and the four charitable were fain to bring him to Christ; he could not.

Peter's wife's mother lay sick of a fever<sup>14</sup>, Christ came to her; she could not come to him. Friends may carry me home to thee, in their

in the congregation; thou must come home in the visitation of thy Spirit, and in the seal of sacrament. But when I am cast into this bed, sick sinews are iron fetters, and those thin iron doors upon me; and, Lord, I have loved visitation of thine house, and the place where honour dwelleth<sup>15</sup>. I lie here, and say, Blessed y that dwell in thy house<sup>16</sup>; but I cannot say, come into thy house; I may say, In thy fear worship towards thy holy temple<sup>17</sup>, but I cannot thy holy temple. And, Lord, the zeal of thy eats me up<sup>18</sup>, as fast as my fever; it is not a pity, for I would come, but it is an excommunication must not.

But, Lord, thou art Lord of and lovest action; why callest thou me from lying? In the grave no man shall praise in the door of the grave, this sick bed, no man hear me praise thee: thou hast not opened my at my mouth might show thee thy praise, but y mouth might show forth thy praise. But postle's fear takes hold of me, that when I reached to others, I myself should be a cast-

7. ii. 22.

<sup>12</sup> Matt. viii. 6.

<sup>13</sup> Matt. viii. 4.

tt. viii. 14.

<sup>15</sup> Psalm xxvi. 8.

<sup>16</sup> Psalm lxxxiv. 4.

alm v. 7.

<sup>18</sup> Psalm lxix. 9.

away<sup>19</sup>; and therefore am I cast down, that I might not be cast away. Thou couldst take me by the head, as thou didst Abacuc, and carry me so; by a chariot, as thou didst Elijah<sup>20</sup>, and carry me so; but thou carriest me thine own private way, the way by which thou carriedst thy Son, who first lay upon the earth, and prayed, and then had his exaltation, as himself calls his crucifying, and first descended into hell, and then had his ascension. There is another station (indeed neither are stations, but prostrations) lower than this bed; to-morrow I may be laid one story lower, upon the floor, the face of the earth; and next day another story, in the grave, the womb of the earth. As yet God suspends me between heaven and earth, as a meteor; and I am not in heaven because an earthly body clogs me, and I am not in the earth because a heavenly soul sustains me. And it is thine own law, O God, that if a man be smitten so by another, as that he keep his bed, though he die not, he that hurt him must take care of his healing, and recompense him<sup>21</sup>. Thy hand strikes me into this bed, and therefore if I rise again, thou wilt be my form in which I could stand and see thy throne, the heavens, yet hast not removed from me that light by which I can lie and see thyself; who, though thou have weakened my bodily knees, that they cannot bow to thee, hast yet left me the knees of my heart, which are bowed unto thee evermore. As thou hast made this bed thine altar, make me thy sacrifice; and as thou makest thy Son Christ Jesus the priest, so make me his deacon, to minister to him in a cheerful surrender of my body and soul to thy pleasure, by his hands. I come unto thee, O God, my God, I come unto thee, so as I can come, I come to thee, by embracing thy coming to me, I come in the confidence, and in the application of thy servant David's promise, that thou wilt make all my bed in my sickness<sup>22</sup>: all my bed; that, which way soever I turn, I may turn to thee; and as I feel thy hand upon all my body, so I may find it upon all my bed, and see all my corrections, and all my refreshings to flow from one, and the same, and all, from thy hand. As thou hast made these feathers thorns, in the sharpness of this sickness, so, Lord, make these thorns feathers again, feathers of thy dove, in the peace of conscience, and in a holy recourse to thine ark, to the instruments of true comfort, in thy institutions and in the ordinances of thy church. Forget my bed, O Lord, as it hath been a bed of sloth, and worse than sloth; take me not, O Lord, at this advantage, to terrify my soul, with saying, Now I have met thee there, where thou hast so often departed from me; but having burnt up that bed, by these vehement heats, and washed that bed in these abundant sweats, make my bed again, O Lord, and enable me, according to thy command, to commune with mine own heart upon my bed, and be still<sup>23</sup>. To provide a bed for all my former sins whilst I lie upon this bed, and a grave for my sins before I come to my grave; and when I have deposited them in the wounds of thy Son, to rest in that assurance, that my conscience is discharged from further anxiety, and my soul from further danger, and my memory from further calumny. Do this, O Lord, for his sake, who did and suffered so much, that thou mightest, as well in thy justice as in thy mercy, do it for me, thy Son, our Saviour, Christ Jesus.

<sup>22</sup> Psalm xli. 3.<sup>23</sup> Psalm iv. 4.

IV. MEDICUS; VOCATUR.

The Physician is sent for.

IV. MEDITATION.

IT is too little to call man a little world: except God, man is a diminutive to nothing. Man consists of more pieces, more parts, than the world; than the world doth, nay, than the world is. And if those pieces were extended, and stretched out in man, as they are in the world, man would be the giant, and the world the dwarf; the world but the map, and the man the world. If all the veins in our bodies were extended n; that do not only bestride all the sea and but span the sun and firmament at once: my hts reach all, comprehend all. Inexplicable ry! I their creator am in a close prison, in a ed, any where; and any one of my creatures, my hts, is with the sun, and beyond the sun, overthe sun, and overgoes the sun in one pace, one very where. And then, as the other world pro-serpents, and vipers, malignant and venomous

res, and worms, and caterpillars, that endeavour vour that world which produces them, and ers compiled and complicated of divers parents inds; so this world, ourselves, produces all these
, in producing diseases, and sicknesses of all sorts; venomous and infectious diseases, feeding onsuming diseases, and manifold and entangled es, made up of many several ones. And can ther world name so many venomous, so many ming, so many monstrous creatures, as we can es of all these kinds? O miserable abundance, ggarly riches! How much do we lack of having lies for every disease, when as yet we have not s for them? But we have a Hercules against giants, these monsters; that is, the physician:
usters up all the forces of the other world to ur this; all nature to relieve man. We have hysician, but we are not the physician. Here rink in our proportion, sink in our dignity, in ct of very mean creatures, who are physicians to selves. The hart that is pursued and wounded, say, knows an herb, which being eaten, throws ie arrow: a strange kind of vomit. The dog ursues it, though he be subject to sickness, even rbially, knows his grass that recovers him. And y be true, that the druggier is as near to man as ier creatures; it may be that obvious and present

simples, easy to be had, would cure him ; but the apothecary is not so near him, nor the physician so near him, as they two are to other creatures ; man hath not that innate instinct, to apply those natural medicines to his present danger, as those inferior creatures have ; he is not his own apothecary, his own physician, as they are. Call back therefore thy meditations again, and bring it down : what is become of man's great extent and proportion, when himself shrinks himself, and consumes himself to a handful of dust ; what is become of his soaring thoughts, his compassing thoughts, when himself brings himself to the ignorance, to the thoughtlessness, of the grave ? His diseases are his own, but the physician is not ; he hath them at home, but he must send for the physician.

IV. EXPOSTULATION.

I HAVE not the righteousness of Job, but I have the desire of Job ; I would speak to the Almighty, and I would reason with God<sup>1</sup>. My God, my God, how soon wouldst thou have me go to the physician,

e for meat, and their leaves for medicine<sup>2</sup>.
 : voice of thy Son, Wilt thou be made whole<sup>3</sup>?
 raws from the patient a confession, that he was could not make himself well. And it is thine ice, Is there no physician<sup>4</sup>? That inclines oses us to accept thine ordinance. And it is e of the wise man, both for the matter, physic
The Lord hath created medicines out of the and he that is wise shall not abhor them<sup>5</sup>,
 the art, and the person, the physician cutteth ng disease. In all these voices, thou sendest ose helps which thou hast afforded us in that.
 t not thou avow that voice too, He that hath against his Maker, let him fall into the of the physician<sup>6</sup>; and wilt not thou afford understanding of those words? Thou, who us for a blessing to the physician, dost not : a curse to us to go when thou sendest. Is curse rather in this, that only he falls into the
 of the physician, that casts himself wholly,
 upon the physician, confides in him, relies im, attends all from him, and neglects that l physic, which thou also hast instituted in thy
 : so to fall into the hands of the physician is a l a punishment of former sins; so, as Asa fell, his disease sought not to the Lord, but to the zn<sup>7</sup>. Reveal therefore to me thy method, O nd see whether I have followed it; that thou have glory, if I have; and I pardon, if I have l help that I may. Thy method is, In time of kness, be not negligent: wherein wilt thou
 y diligence expressed? Pray unto the Lord, will make thee whole<sup>8</sup>. O Lord, I do; I

2. xlvii. 12.
 us. xxxviii. 4.
 ron. xvi. 12.

<sup>3</sup> John, v. 6.
<sup>6</sup> Eccclus. xxxviii. 15.
<sup>8</sup> Eccclus. xxxviii. 9.

<sup>4</sup> Jer. viii. 22.

pray, and pray thy servant David's prayer, Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am weak ; heal me, O Lord, for my bones are vexed<sup>9</sup>: I know, that even my weakness is a reason, a motive, to induce thy mercy, and my sickness an occasion of thy sending health. When art thou so ready, when is it so seasonable to thee, to commiserate, as in misery? But is praying for health in season, as soon as I am sick? Thy method goes further: Leave off from sin, and order thy hands aright, and cleanse thy heart from all wickedness<sup>10</sup>. Have I, O Lord, done so? O Lord, I have; by thy grace, I am come to a holy detestation of my former sin; is there any more? In thy method there is more: Give a sweet savour, and a memorial of fine flour, and make a fat offering, as not being<sup>11</sup>. And Lord, by thy grace, I have done that, sacrificed a little of that little which thou lentest me, to them for whom thou lentest it: and now in thy method, and by thy steps, I am come to that, Then give place to the physician, for the Lord hath created him; let him not go from thee, for thou hast need of him<sup>12</sup>. I send for the phy-physician. I come to both, as to thine ce, and bless and glorify thy name, that, in ses, thou hast afforded help to man by the of man. Even in the new Jerusalem, in itself, it hath pleased thee to discover a tree,

a tree of life there, but the leaves thereof
the healing of the nations<sup>15</sup>. Life itself is ee there, for thou art life; and all kinds of wrought upon us here, by thine instruments, from thence. Thou wouldst have healed
n, but she is not healed<sup>16</sup>. Take from me,
 , her perverseness, her wilfulness, her refrac-
 , and hear thy Spirit saying in my soul, Heal Lord, for I would be healed. Ephraim saw ness, and Judah his wound; then went in to the Assyrian, and sent to King Jareb,
ld not he heal you, nor cure you of your
 '. Keep me back, O Lord, from them who ess arts of healing the soul, or of the body, by not imprinted by thee in the church, for the not in nature for the body. There is no health to be had by superstition, nor bodily by ift; thou, Lord, and only thou, art Lord of Thou in thyself art Lord of both, and thou in art the physician, the applier of both. With
oes we are healed<sup>18</sup>, says the prophet there;
 efore he was scourged, we were healed with pes; how much more shall I be healed now, en that which he hath already suffered actually lly and effectually applied to me? Is there any curable, upon which that balm drops? Any empty as that that blood cannot fill it? Thou st to heal the earth<sup>19</sup>; but it is when the inhaof the earth pray that thou wouldst heal it.
 romisest to heal their waters, but their miry

. xxii. 2.

<sup>16</sup> Jer. li. 9.<sup>17</sup> Hosea, v. 13.

ah, liii. 5.

<sup>19</sup> 2 Chron. vii. 14.

places, and standing waters, thou sayest there, thou wilt not heal<sup>20</sup>. My returning to any sin, if I should return to the ability of sinning over all my sins again, thou wouldst not pardon. Heal this earth, O my God, by repentant tears, and heal these waters, these tears from all bitterness, from all diffidence, from all dejection, by establishing my irremovable assurance in thee. Thy Son went about healing all manner of sicknesses<sup>21</sup>. (No disease incurable, none difficult; he healed them in passing). Virtue went out of him, and he healed all<sup>22</sup>, all the multitude (no person incurable), he healed them every whit<sup>23</sup> (as himself speaks), he left no relics of the disease; and will this universal physician pass by this hospital, and not visit me? not heal me? not heal me wholly? Lord, I look not that thou shouldst say by thy messenger to me, as to Hezekiah, Behold, I will heal thee, and on the third day thou shalt go up to the house of the Lord<sup>24</sup>. I look not that thou shouldst say to me, as to Moses in Miriam's behalf, when Moses would have had her healed presently, If her father had but spit

V. SOLUS ADEST.

The Physician comes.

V. MEDITATION.

AS sickness is the greatest misery, so the greatest misery of sickness is solitude; when the infectiousness of the disease deters them who should assist from coming; even the physician dares scarce come. Solitude is a torment which is not threatened in hell itself. Mere vacuity, the first agent, God, the first instrument of God, nature, will not admit; nothing can be utterly empty, but so near a degree towards vacuity, as solitude, to be but one, they love not. When I am dead, and my body might infect, they have a remedy, they may bury me; but when I am but sick, and might infect, they have no remedy, but their absence, and my solitude. It is an excuse to them that are great, and pretend, and yet are loath to come; it is an inhibition to those who would truly come, because they may be made instruments, and pestiducts, to the infection of others, by their coming. And it is an outlawry, an excommunication upon the patient, and separates him from all offices, not only of civility, but of working charity. A long sickness will weary friends at last, but a pestilential sickness averts them from the beginning. God himself would admit a figure of society, as there is a plurality of persons in God, though there be but one God; and all his external actions testify a love of society, and communion. In heaven there are orders of angels, and armies of martyrs, and in that house many mansions; in earth, families, cities, churches, colleges, all plural things; and lest either of these should not be company enough alone, there is an association of both, a communion of him; but whether this disease may not alien and remove my friends, so that they stand aloof from my sore, and my kinsmen stand afar off<sup>9</sup>, I cannot tell. I cannot fear but that thou wilt reckon with me from this minute, in which, by thy grace, I see thee; whether this understanding, and this will, and this memory may not decay, to the discouragement and the ill interpretation of them that see that heavy change in me, I cannot tell. It was for thy blessed, thy powerful Son alone, to tread the wine-press alone, and none of the people with him<sup>10</sup>. I am not able to pass this agony alone, not alone without thee; thou art thy spirit, not alone without thine; spiritual and temporal physicians are thine, not alone without mine; those whom the bands of blood or friendship have made mine, are mine; and if thou, or thine, or mine, abandon me, I am alone, and woe unto me if I be alone. Elias himself fainted under that apprehension, Lo, I am left alone<sup>11</sup>; and Martha murmured at that, said to Christ, Lord, dost not thou care that my sister hath left me to serve alone<sup>12</sup>? Neither could Jeremiah enter into his lamentations from a higher for God, who accompanies us most alone? May I not remember, and apply too, that though God came not to Jacob till he found him alone, yet when he found him alone, he wrestled with him, and lamed him<sup>16</sup>; that when, in the dereliction and forsaking of friends and physicians, a man is left alone to God, God may so wrestle with this Jacob, with this conscience, as to put it out of joint, and so appear to him as that he dares not look upon him face to face, when as by way of reflection, in the consolation of his temporal or spiritual servants, and ordinances, he durst, if they were there? But a faithful friend is the physic of life, and they that fear the Lord shall find him<sup>17</sup>. Therefore hath the Lord afforded me both in one person, that physician who is my faithful friend.

V. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who calledst down fire from heaven upon the sinfulnesses but once, and openedst the earth to swallow the murmurers but once, and threwest down the tower of Siloam upon sinners but once, but for thy works of mercy repeatest them often, and still workest by thine own patterns, as thou broughtest man into this world, by giving him a helper fit for him here; so, whether it be thy will to continue me long thus, or to dismiss me by death, be pleased to afford me the helps fit for both conditions, either for my weak stay here, or my final transmigration from hence, And if thou mayst receive glory by that way (and by all ways thou mayst receive glory), glorify thyself in preserving this body from such infections as might withhold those who would come, or endanger them who do come; and preserve this soul in the faculties thereof from all such listempers as might shake the assurance which myself and others have had, that because thou hast loved me thou wouldst love me to my end, and at my end. Open none of my doors, not of my heart, not of mine ears, not of my house, to any supplanter that would enter to undermine me in my religion to thee, in the time of my weakness, or to defame me, and magnify himself with false rumours of such a victory and surprisal of me, after I am dead. Be my salvation, and plead my salvation; work it and declare it; and as thy triumphant shall be, so let the militant church be assured that thou wast my God, and I thy servant, to and in my consummation. Bless thou the learning and the labours of this man whom thou sendest to assist me; and since thou takest me by the hand, and puttest me into his hands (for I come to him in thy name, who in thy name comes to me), since I clog not my hopes in him, no, nor my prayers to thee, with any limited conditions, but inwrap all in those two petitions, Thy kingdom come, thy will be done; prosper him, and relieve me, in thy way, in thy time, and in thy measure. Amen.

<sup>16</sup> Gen. xxxii. 24. 25.<sup>17</sup> Eccles. vi. 16.

practice. As the ill affections of the spleen complicate and mingle themselves with every infirmity of the body, so doth fear insinuate itself in every action or passion of the mind; and as wind in the body will counterfeit any disease, and seem the stone, and seem the gout, so fear will counterfeit any disease of the mind. It shall seem love, a love of having; and it is but a fear, a jealous and suspicious fear of losing. It shall seem valour in despising and undervaluing danger; and it is but fear in an overvaluing of opinion and estimation, and a fear of losing that. A man that is not afraid of a lion is afraid of a cat; not afraid of starving, and yet is afraid of some joint of meat at the table, presented to feed him; not afraid of the sound of drums, and trumpets, and shot, and those which they seek to drown, the last cries of men, and is afraid of some particular harmonious instrument; so much afraid as that with any of these the enemy might drive this man, otherwise valiant enough, out of the field. I know not what fear is, nor I know not what it is that I fear now; I fear not the hastening of my death, and yet I do fear the increase of the disease; I should belie nature if I should deny that I feared this; and if I should say that I feared death, I should belie God. My weakness is from nature, who hath but her measure; my strength is from God, who possesses and distributes infinitely. As then every cold air is not a damp, every shivering is not a stupefaction; so every fear is not a fearfulness, every declination is not a running away, every debating is not a resolving, every wish that it were not thus, is not a murmuring nor a dejection though it be thus; but as my physician's fear puts not him from his practice, neither doth mine put me from receiving from God, and man, and myself, spiritual and civil and moral assistances and consolations.

VI. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, I find in thy book that fear is a stifling spirit, a spirit of suffocation; that Ishbosheth could not speak, nor reply in his own defence to Abner, because he was afraid<sup>1</sup>. It was thy servant Job's case too, who, before he could say any thing to thee, says of thee, Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrify me, then would I speak with him, and not fear him; but it is not so with me<sup>2</sup>. Shall a fear of thee take away my devotion to thee? Dost thou command me to speak to thee, and command me to fear thee; and do these destroy one another? There is no perplexity in thee, my God; no inextricableness in thee, my light and my clearness, my sun and my moon, that directest me as well in the night of adversity and fear, as in my day of prosperity and confidence. I must then speak to thee at all times, but when must I fear thee? At all times too. When didst thou rebuke any petitioner with the name of importunate? Thou hast proposed to us a morrow upon thy knees, at thy bedside; pray upon thy knees there then, and God will not say, I will hear thee on Sunday at church; God is no dilatory God, no froward God; prayer is never unseasonable, God is never asleep nor absent. But, O my God, can I do this, and fear thee; come to thee, and speak to thee, in all places, at all hours, and fear thee? Dare I ask this question? There is more boldness in the question than in the coming; I may do it though I fear thee; I cannot do it except I fear thee. So well hast thou provided that we should always fear thee, as that thou hast provided that we should fear no person but thee, nothing but thee; no men? No. Whom? The Lord is my help and my salvation, whom shall I fear<sup>5</sup>? Great enemies? Not great enemies, for no enemies are great to them that fear thee. Fear not the people of this land, for they are bread to you<sup>6</sup>: they shall not only not eat us, not eat our bread, but they shall be our bread. Why should we fear them? But for all this metaphorical bread, victory over enemies that thought to devour us, may we not fear, that we may lack bread literally? And fear famine, though we fear not enemies? Young lions do lack, and suffer hunger, but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing<sup>7</sup>. Never? Though it be well with them at one time, may they not fear that it may be worse? Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil<sup>8</sup>? says thy servant David. Though his own sin had made them evil, he feared them not. No? not if this evil determine in death? Not though in a death; not though in a death inflicted by violence, by malice, by our own desert; fear not the sentence of death<sup>9</sup>, if thou fear God. Thou art, O my God, so far from admitting us, that fear thee,

<sup>5</sup> Psalm xxvii. 1.    <sup>6</sup> Num. xiv. 9.    <sup>7</sup> Psalm xxxv. 70.

<sup>8</sup> Psalm xlix. 5.    <sup>9</sup> Eccclus. xli. 3.

to fear others, as that thou makest others to fear us; as Herod feared John, because he was a holy and a just man, and observed him<sup>10</sup>. How fully then, O my abundant God, how gently, O my sweet, my easy God, dost thou unentangle me in any scruple arising out of the consideration of this my fear! Is not this that which thou intendest, when thou sayest, The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him<sup>11</sup>; the secret, the mystery of the right use of fear. Dost thou not mean this when thou sayest, we shall understand the fear of the Lord<sup>12</sup>? Have it, and have benefit by it; have it, and stand under it; be directed by it, and not be dejected with it. And dost thou not propose that church for our example, when thou sayest, the church of Judea walked in the fear of God<sup>13</sup>; they had it, but did not sit down lazily, nor fall down weakly, nor sink under it. There is a fear which weakens men in the service of God. Adam was afraid, because he was naked<sup>14</sup>. They who have put off thee are a prey to all. They may fear, for thou wilt laugh when their fear comes upon them, as thou hast told them more than once<sup>15</sup>. And thou wilt make them fear far; for the fear of the Lord is his treasure<sup>18</sup>.

 That hath that, lacks nothing that man can have,
 In that God does give. Timorous men thou dost: Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Such thou dismissest from thy service with , though of them there went from Gideon's army thirty-two thousand, and remained but ten thousand<sup>20</sup>.
 Thou sendest farther than so; thither from whence never return: The fearful, and the unbelieving, that burning lake which is a second death<sup>21</sup>.
 There is a fear, and there is a hope, which are equal companions to thee; for they were confounded, as they hoped<sup>22</sup>, says thy servant Job; because they had misplaced, miscentred their hopes; they were not in thee, and such shall fear, and not in thee. But in thy fear, my God, and my fear, my God, and my hope, is hope, and love, and confidence, peace, and every limb and ingredient of happiness comprised; for joy includes all, and fear and joy put together, nay, constitute one another. The three departed from the sepulchre<sup>23</sup>, the women were made supernumerary apostles, apostles to the world; mothers of the church, and of the fathers, fathers of the church, the apostles themselves;
 women, angels of the resurrection, went from the sepulchre with fear and joy; they ran, says the text, they ran upon those two legs, fear and joy; and was the right leg: they joy in thee, O Lord, that in thee, and fear thee only, who feel this joy in thee.
 Thy fear and thy love are inseparable, still we are filled upon, in infinite places, to fear God; yet the commandment, which is the root of all, is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God; he doeth neither that doeth nothing; he omits neither, that does one. Therefore isaiah, xxxiii. 6. <sup>19</sup> Matt. viii. 26. <sup>20</sup> Judges, vii. 3.

lev. xxi. 8. <sup>22</sup> Job, vi. 20. <sup>23</sup> Matt. xxviii. 8.

when thy servant David had said that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom<sup>24</sup>, and his son had repeated it again<sup>25</sup>, he that collects both calls this fear the root of wisdom; and, that it may embrace all, he calls it wisdom itself<sup>26</sup>. A wise man, therefore, is never without it, never without the exercise of it; therefore thou sentest Moses to thy people, that they might learn to fear thee all the days of their lives<sup>27</sup>, not in heavy and calamitous, but in good and cheerful days too; for Noah, who had assurance of his deliverance, yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark, for the saving of his house<sup>28</sup>. A wise man will fear in every thing<sup>29</sup>. And therefore, though I pretend to no other degree of wisdom, I am abundantly rich in this, that I lie here possessed with that fear which is thy fear, both that this sickness is thy immediate correction, and not merely a natural accident, and therefore fearful, because it is a fearful thing to fall into thy hands; and that this fear preserves me from all inordinate fear, arising out of the infirmity of nature, because thy hand being upon me, thou wilt never let me fall out of thy hand.

ness, that there is danger therein, let me not, O Lord, go about to overcome the sense of that fear, so far, as to pretermitt the fitting and preparing of myself for the worst that may be feared, the passage out of this life. Many of thy blessed martyrs have passed out of this life, without any show of fear; but thy most blessed Son himself did not so. Thy martyrs were known to be but men, and therefore it pleased thee to fill them with thy Spirit and thy power, in that they did more than men; thy Son was declared by thee, and by himself, to be God; and it was requisite that he should declare himself to be man also, in the weaknesses of man. Let me not therefore, O my God, be ashamed of these fears, but let me feel them to determine, where his fear did, in a present submitting of all to thy will. And when thou shalt have inflamed and thawed my former coldnesses and indervations with these heats, and quenched my former heats with these sweats and inundations, and rectified my former presumptions and negligences with these fears, be pleased, O Lord, as one made so by thee, to think me fit for thee; and whether it be thy pleasure to dispose of this body, this garment, so as to put it to a farther wearing in this world, or to lay it up in the common wardrobe, the grave, for the next, glorify thyself in thy choice now, and glorify it then, with that glory, which thy Son, our Saviour, Christ Jesus, hath purchased for them, whom thou makest partakers of his resurrection. Amen.

VII. SOCIOS SIBI JUNGERE INSTAT.

The Physician desires to have others joined with him.

VII. MEDITATION.

THERE is more fear, therefore more cause. If the physician desire help, the burden grows great: there is a growth of the disease then; but there must be an autumn too; but whether an autumn of the disease or me, it is not my part to choose: but if it be of me, it is of both; my disease cannot survive me, I may overlive it. Howsoever, his desiring of others argues his candour and his ingenuity: if the danger be great, he justifies his proceedings, and he disguises nothing that calls in witnesses; and if the danger be not great, he is not ambitious, that is so ready to divide the thanks and the honour of that work, which he began alone, with others. It diminishes not the dignity of a monarch, that he derive young man's back, and says nothing; age is a sickness, and youth is an ambush; and we need so many physicians as may make up a watch, and spy every inconvenience. There is scarce any thing that hath not killed somebody; a hair, a feather hath done it; nay, that which is our best antidote against it hath done it; the best cordial hath been deadly poison. Men have died of joy, and almost forbidden their friends to weep for them, when they have seen them die laughing. Even that tyrant, Dionysius (I think the same that suffered so much after), who could not die of that sorrow, of that high fall, from a king to a wretched private man, died of so poor a joy, as to be declared by the people at a theatre, that he was a good poet. We say often, that a man may live of a little; but, alas, of how much less may a man die? And therefore the more assistants the better; who comes to a day of hearing, in a cause of any importance, with one advocate? In our funerals, we ourselves have no interest; there we cannot advise, we cannot direct: and though some nations (the Egyptians in particular) built themselves better tombs than houses, because they were to dwell longer in them; yet, amongst ourselves, the greatest man of style whom we have had, the Conqueror, was left, as soon as his soul left him, not only without persons to assist at his grave, but without a grave. Who will keep us then, we know not; as long as we can, let us admit as much help as we can; another and another physician, is not another and another indication, and symptom of death, but another and another assistant, and protector of life: nor do they so much feed the imagination with apprehension of danger, as the understanding with comfort. Let not one bring learning, another diligence, another religion, but every one bring all; and as many ingredients enter into a receipt, so may many men make the receipt. But why do I exercise my meditation so long upon this, of having plentiful help in time of need? Is not my meditation rather to be inclined another way, to condole and commiserate their distress who have none? How many are sicker (perchance) than I, and laid in their woful straw at home (if that corner be a home), and have no more hope of help, though they die, than of preferment, though they live! Nor do more expect to see a physician then, than to be an officer after; of whom, the first that takes knowledge, is the sexton that buries them, who buries them in oblivion too! For they do but fill up the number of the dead in the bill, but we shall never hear their names, till we read them in the book of life with our own. How many are sicker (perchance) than I, and thrown into hospitals, where (as a fish left upon the sand must stay the tide) they must stay the physician's hour of visiting, and then can be but visited! How many are sicker (perchance) than all we, and have not this hospital to cover them, not this straw to lie in, to die in, but have their gravestones under them, and breathe out their

VII. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, thy blessed servant Augustine begged of thee, that Moses might come and tell him what he meant by some places of Genesis: may I have leave to ask of that Spirit that writ that book, why, when David expected news from Joab's army<sup>1</sup>, and that the watchman told him that he saw a man running alone, David concluded out of that circumstance, that if he came alone, he brought good news<sup>2</sup>? I see the grammar, the word signifies so, and is so ever accepted, good news; but I see not the logic nor the rhetoric, how David would prove or persuade that his news was good because he was alone, except a greater company might have made great impressions of danger, by imploring and importuning present supplies: howsoever that be, I am sure, that that which thy apostle says to Timothy, Only Luke is with me<sup>3</sup>, Luke, and nobody but Luke, hath a taste of complaint and sorrow in it: though Luke want no testimony of ability, of forwardness, of constancy, and perseverance, in assisting that great building which St. Paul laboured in, yet St. Paul is affected with that, that there was none but Luke to assist. We take St. Luke to have been a physician, and it admits the application the better, that in the presence of one good physician we may be glad of more. It was not only a civil spirit of policy, or order, that moved Moses's father-in-law to persuade him to divide the burden of government and judicature with others, and take others to his assistance<sup>4</sup>, but it was also thy immediate Spirit, O my God, that moved Moses to present unto

<sup>1</sup> 2 Sam. xviii. 25.

<sup>2</sup> So all but our translation takes it; even Buxdor and Schindler.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Tim. iv. 11.

<sup>4</sup> Exod. xviii. 13.

thee seventy of the elders of Israel<sup>5</sup>, to receive of that Spirit, which was upon Moses only before, such a portion as might ease him in the government of that people; though Moses alone had endowments above all, thou gavest him other assistants. I consider thy plentiful goodness, O my God, in employing angels, more than one, in so many of thy remarkable works. Of thy Son, thou sayest, Let all the angels of God worship him<sup>6</sup>; if that be in heaven, upon earth he says, that he could command twelve legions of angels<sup>7</sup>; and when heaven and earth shall be all one, at the last day, thy Son, O God, the Son of man, shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him<sup>8</sup>. The angels that celebrated his birth to the shepherds<sup>9</sup>, the angels that celebrated his second birth, his resurrection, to the Maries<sup>10</sup>, were in the plural, angels associated with angels. In Jacob's ladder<sup>11</sup>, they who ascended and descended, and maintained the trade between heaven and earth, between thee and us, they who have the commission, and charge to guide us in all our ways<sup>12</sup>, they who hastened Lot<sup>13</sup>, and in him, us, from places of danger service, angels associated with angels. The power of a single angel we see in that one, who, in one night destroyed almost two hundred thousand in Sennacherib's army<sup>19</sup>, yet thou often employest many; as we know the power of salvation is abundantly in any one evangelist, and yet thou hast afforded us four. Thy Son proclaims of himself, that thy Spirit hath anointed him to preach the Gospel<sup>20</sup>, yet he hath given others for the perfecting of the saints in the work of the ministry<sup>21</sup>. Thou hast made him Bishop of our souls<sup>22</sup>, but there are others bishops too. He gave the Holy Ghost<sup>23</sup>, and others gave it also. Thy way, O my God (and, O my God, thou lovest to walk in thine own ways, for they are large), thy way from the beginning, is multiplication of thy helps; and therefore it were a degree of ingratitude, not to accept this mercy of affording me many helps for my bodily health, as a type and earnest of thy gracious purpose now, and ever, to afford me the same assistances. That for thy great help, thy word, I may seek that, not from corners, nor conventicles, nor schismatical singularities, but from the association and communion of thy Catholic church, and those persons whom thou hast always furnished that church withal: and that I may associate thy word with thy sacrament, thy seal with thy patent; and in that sacrament associate the sign with the thing signified, the bread with the body of thy Son, so as I may be sure to have received both, and to be made thereby (as thy blessed servant Augustine says) the ark, and the monument, and the tomb of thy most blessed Son, that he, and all the merits of his death, may, by that receiving, be buried in me, to my quickening in this world, and my immortal establishing in the next.

<sup>19</sup> 2 Kings, xix. 35.<sup>20</sup> Luke, iv. 18.<sup>21</sup> Eph. iv. 12.<sup>22</sup> 1 Pet. ii. 25.<sup>23</sup> John, xx. 22.

VII. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who gavest to thy servants in the wilderness thy manna, bread so conditioned, qualified so, as that, to every man, manna tasted like that which that man liked best, I humbly beseech thee to make this correction, which I acknowledge to be part of my daily bread, to taste so to me, not as I would, but as thou wouldst have it taste, and to conform my taste, and make it agreeable to thy will. Thou wouldst have thy corrections taste of humiliation, but thou wouldst have them taste of consolation too; taste of danger, but taste of assurance too. As therefore thou hast imprinted in all thine elements of which our bodies consist, two manifest qualities, so that as thy fire dries, so it heats too; and as thy water moistens, so it cools too; so, O Lord, in these corrections which are the elements of our regeneration, by which our souls are made thine, imprint thy two qualities, those two operations, that, as they scourge us, they may scourge us into the way to thee: that when they have scourged us signification; but yet when I have read it in that language, as a correction, let me translate it into another, and read it as a mercy; and which of these is the original, and which is the translation; whether thy mercy or thy correction were thy primary and original intention in this sickness, I cannot conclude, though death conclude me; for as it must necessarily appear to be a correction, so I can have no greater argument of thy mercy, than to die in thee, and by that death to be united to him who died for me.

VIII. ET REX IPSE SUUM MITTIT.

The King sends his own Physician.

VIII. MEDITATION.

STILL when we return to that meditation, that man is a world, we find new discoveries. Let him be a world, and himself will be the land, and misery the sea. His misery (for misery is his, his own; of the happiness even of this world, he is but tenant, but of misery the freeholder; of happiness he is but the farmer, but the usufructuary, but of misery the lord, the proprietary), his misery, as the sea, swells above all the hills, and reaches to the remotest parts of this earth, man; who of himself is but dust, and coagulated and kneaded into earth; by tears his matter is earth, his form misery. In this world, that is mankind, the highest ground, the eminentest hills, are kings; and have they line and lead enough to fathom this sea, and say, "My misery is but this deep?" Scarce any misery equal to sickness, and they are subject to that equally with their lowest subject. A glass is not the less brittle, because a king's face is represented in it; nor a king the less brittle, because God is represented in him. They have physicians continually about them, and therefore sicknesses, or the worst of sicknesses, continual fear of it. Are they gods? He that called them so cannot flatter. They are gods, but sick gods; and God is presented to us under many human affections, as far as infirmities: God is called angry, and sorry, and weary, and heavy, but never a sick God; for then he might die like men, as our gods do. The worst that they could say in reproach and scorn of the gods of the heathen was, that perchance they were asleep; but gods that are so sick as that they cannot sleep, are in an infirmer condition. A god, and need a physician? A Jupiter, and need an Æsculapius? that must have rhubarb to purge his choler, lest he be too angry, and agarick to purge his phlegm, lest he be too drowsy; that as Tertullian says of the Egyptian gods, plants and herbs, that "God was beholden to man for growing in his garden," so we must say of these gods, their eternity (an eternity of threescore and ten years) is in the apothecary's shop, and not in the metaphorical deity. But their deity is better expressed in their humility than in their height; when abounding and overflowing as God in means of doing good they

VIII. EXPOSTULATION.

[Y God, my God, I have a warning from the wise man, that when a rich man speaketh, man holdeth his tongue, and, look, what he, they extol it to the clouds; but if a poor man he, they say, What fellow is this? And if he be, they will help to overthrow him<sup>1</sup>. There-may my words be undervalued, and my errors avated, if I offer to speak of kings; but not by

O my God, because I speak of them as they are, and of thee as thou art in them. Certainly men prepare a way of speaking negligently or reverently of thee, that give themselves that liberty speaking of thy vicegerents, kings: for thou who hast Augustus the empire, gavest it to Nero too; as Vespasian had it from thee, so had Julian: though kings deface in themselves thy first image in their own soul, thou givest no man leave to deface thy second image, imprinted indelibly in their power. Thou knowest, O God, that if I should be slack in celebrating thy mercies to me exhibited by that instrument, my sovereign, to many other faults that touch upon allegiance, I should add the worst of ingratitude, which constitutes an ill man; and sins which are defects in any particular function, are so great as those that destroy our humanity. It is so ill to be an ill subject as to be an ill man; for hath an universal illness, ready to flow and pour itself into any mould, any form, and to spend itself in any function. As therefore thy Son did upon the cross, I look upon the king, and I ask whose image is upon his forehead, whose inscription he hath, and he hath thine; I give unto thee that which is thine; I recommend happiness to thee in all my sacrifices of thanks, that which he enjoys, and in all my prayers, for the continuance and enlargement of them. But let me stop, my God, and consider; will not this look like a piece of art and cunning, to convey into the world an opinion, that I were more particular in his care than other men? and that herein, in a show of humility and thankfulness, I magnify myself more than there is cause? But let not that jealousy stop me, O God, but let me go forward in celebrating thy mercy exhibited by him. This which he doth now, in assisting so my bodily health, I know is common to me with many: many, many have tasted of that expression of his graciousness. Where he can give health by his own hands he doth, and to more than any of his predecessors have done: therefore hath God reserved one disease for him, that he only might cure it, though perchance not only by one title and interest, nor only as one king. To those that need it not, in that kind, and so cannot have it by his own hand, he sends a donative of health in sending his physician. The holy king St. Louis, in France, and our Maud, is celebrated for that, that personally they visited hospitals, and assisted in the cure even of my father's house<sup>3</sup>. It is kingly to give; when Araunah gave that great and free present to David, that place, those instruments for sacrifice, and the sacrifices themselves, it is said there by thy Spirit, All these things did Araunah give, as a king, to the king<sup>4</sup>. To give is an approaching to the condition of kings, but to give health, an approaching to the King of kings, to thee. But this his assisting to my bodily health, thou knowest, O God, and so do some others of thine honourable servants know, is but the twilight of that day wherein thou, through him, hast shined upon me before; but the echo of that voice, whereby thou, through him, hast spoke to me before, then when he, first of any man, conceived a hope that I might be of some use in thy church, and descended to an intimation, to a persuasion, almost to a solicitation, that I would embrace that calling. And thou who hadst put that desire into his heart, didst also put into mine an obedience to it; and I, who was sick before of a vertiginous giddiness and irresolution, and almost spent all my time in consulting how I should spend it, was by this man of God, and God of men, put into the pool and recovered: when I asked, perchance, a stone, he gave me bread; when I asked, perchance, a scorpion, he gave me a fish; when I asked a temporal office, he denied not, refused not that; but let me see that he had rather I took this. These things thou, O God, who forgettest nothing, hast not forgot, though perchance he, because they were benefits, hath; but I am not only a witness, but an instance, that our Jehoshaphat hath a care to ordain priests, as well as judges<sup>5</sup>: and not only to send physicians for temporal, but to be the physician for spiritual health.

<sup>1</sup> Ecclus. xiii. 23.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Sam. xxiv. 17. <sup>4</sup> 2 Sam. xxiv. 22, 23. <sup>5</sup> 2 Chron. xix. 8.

VIII. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who, though thou have reserved thy treasure of perfect joy and perfect glory, to be given by thine own hands then, when, by seeing thee as thou art in thyself, and knowing thee as we are known, we shall possess in an instant, and possess for ever, all that can any way conduce to our happiness, yet here also, in this world, givest us such earnest of that full payment, as by the value of the earnest we may give some estimate of the treasure, humbly and thankfully I acknowledge, that thy blessed Spirit instructs me to make a difference of thy blessings in this world, by that difference of the instruments by which it hath pleased thee to derive them unto me. As we see thee here in a glass, so we receive from thee here by reflection and by instruments. Even casual things come from thee ; and that which we call fortune here hath another name above. Nature reaches out her hand, and gives us corn, and wine, and oil, and milk ; but thou fillest her hand before, and thou openest her goodness upon the whole world by the wonted means and instruments, the same sun and moon, the same nature and industry, so to continue the same blessings upon this state and this church by the same hand, so long as that thy Son, when he comes in the clouds, may find him, or his son, or his son's sons ready to give an account, and able to stand in that judgment, for their faithful stewardship and dispensation of thy talents so abundantly committed to them; and be to him, O God, in all distempers of his body, in all anxieties of spirit, in all holy sadnesses of soul, such a physician in thy proportion, who art the greatest in heaven, as he hath been in soul and body to me, in his proportion who is the greatest upon earth.

IX. MEDICAMINA SCRIBUNT.

Upon their Consultation, they prescribe.

IX. MEDITATION.

THEY have seen me and heard me, arraigned me in these fetters, and received the evidence; I have cut up mine own anatomy, dissected myself, and they are gone to read upon me. O how manifold and perplexed a thing, nay, how wanton and various a thing is ruin and destruction! God presented to David three kinds, war, famine, and pestilence; Satan left out these, and brought in fires from heaven and winds from the wilderness. If there were no ruin but sickness, we see the masters of that art can scarce number, not name all sicknesses; every thing that disorders a faculty, and the function of that, is a sickness: the names will not serve them which are given from the place affected, the pleurisy is so; nor from the effect which it works, the falling sickness is so: they cannot have names enough, from what it does, nor where it is ; but they must extort names from what it is like, what it resembles : and but in some one thing, or else they would lack names ; for the wolf, and the canker, and the polypus are so : and that question, whether there be more names or things, is as perplexed in sicknesses as in any thing else ; except it be easily resolved upon that side, that there are more sicknesses than names. If ruin were reduced to that one way, that man could perish no way but by sickness, yet his danger were infinite ; and if sickness were reduced to that one way, that there were no sickness but a fever, yet the way were infinite still ; for it would overload and oppress any natural, disorder and discompose any artificial, memory, to deliver the names of several fevers ; how intricate a work then have they, who are gone to consult which of these sicknesses mine is, and then which of these fevers, and then what it would do, and then how it may be countermined. But even in ill, it is a degree of good when the evil will admit consultation. In many diseases, that which is but an accident, but a symptom of the main disease, is so violent, that the

: his choler, or to break the blow? But where is room for consultation, things are not despatched.

They consult, so there is nothing rashly, considerably done; and then they prescribe, they, so there is nothing covertly, disguisedly, unadvisedly done. In bodily diseases it is not always so; times, as soon as the physician's foot is in the door, his knife is in the patient's arm; the disease does not allow a minute's forbearing of blood, nor trying of other remedies. In states and matters of government it is so too; they are sometimes surprised with such accidents, as that the magistrate asks what may be done by law, but does that which is necessarily be done in that case. But it is a seed of good in evil, a degree that carries hope and comfort in it, when we may have recourse to that which is written, and that the proceedings may be just, and ingenuous, and candid, and avowable, for which gives satisfaction and acquiescence. They who have received my anatomy of myself consult, and end in consultation in prescribing, and in prescribing in physic; proper and convenient remedy: for if they should come in again, and chide me for some disorder that had occasioned and induced, or that had increased and exalted this sickness, or if they should need to write now rules for my diet and exercise when I were well, this were to antedate or to postdate the consultation, not to give physic. It were rather vexation than a relief, to tell a condemned prisoner, who might have lived if you had done this; and if you can get your pardon, you shall do well to take this or this course hereafter. I am glad they know (I have hid nothing from them), glad they consult (they have nothing from one another), glad they write (they have nothing from the world), glad that they write and prescribe physic, that there are remedies for the present case.

IX. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, allow me a just indignation, a holy detestation of the insolency of that man who, because he was of that high rank, of whom thou hast said, They are gods, thought himself more than equal to thee; that king of Aragon, Alphonsus, so perfect in the motions of the heavenly bodies as that he adventured to say, that if he had been of counsel with thee, in the making of the heavens, the heavens should have been disposed in a better order than they are. The king Amaziah would not endure thy prophet to reprehend him, but asked him in anger, Art thou made of the king's counsel<sup>1</sup>? When thy prophet Esaias asks that question, Who hath directed the spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor, hath taught him<sup>2</sup>? it is after he had settled and determined that office upon thy Son, and him only, when he joins with those great titles, the mighty God, and the Prince of peace, this also, the Counsellor<sup>3</sup>; and after he had settled upon him the spirit of might and of counsel<sup>4</sup>. So that then thou, O God, though thou tion for my body now, but I open my infirmities, I anatomize my body to them. So I do my soul to thee, O my God, in an humble confession, that there is no vein in me that is not full of the blood of thy Son, whom I have crucified, and crucified again, by multiplying many, and often repeating the same sins : that there is no artery in me that hath not the spirit of error, the spirit of lust, the spirit of giddiness in it<sup>7</sup>; no bone in me that is not hardened with the custom of sin, and nourished and supplied with the marrow of sin; no sinews, no ligaments, that do not tie and chain sin and sin together. Yet, O blessed and glorious Trinity, O holy and whole college, and yet but one physician, if you take this confession into a consultation, my case is not desperate, my destruction is not decreed. If your consultation determine in writing, if you refer me to that which is written, you intend my recovery : for all the way, O my God (ever constant to thine own ways), thou hast proceeded openly, intelligibly, manifestly, by the book. From thy first book, the book of life, never shut to thee, but never thoroughly open to us; from thy second book, the book of nature, where, though subobscurely and in shadows, thou hast expressed thine own image; from thy third book, the Scriptures, where thou hadst written all in the Old, and then lightedst us a candle to read it by, in the New Testament; to these thou hadst added the book of just and useful laws, established by them to whom thou hast committed thy people; to those, the manuals, the pocket, the bosom books of our own consciences; to those thy particular books of all our particular sins; and to those, the book with seven seals, which only the Lamb which was slain, was found worthy to open<sup>8</sup>; which, I hope, it shall not disagree with the meaning of thy.

<sup>7</sup> 1 Tim. iv. 1. Hos. iv. 12. Isaiah, xix. 14.      <sup>8</sup> Rev. vii. 1.

blessed Spirit, to interpret, the promulgation of their pardon and righteousness who are washed in the blood of that Lamb; and if thou refer me to these books, to a new reading, a new trial by these books, this fever may be but a burning in the hand, and I may be saved, though not by my book, mine own conscience, nor by thy other books, yet by thy first, the book of life, thy decree for my election, and by thy last, the book of the Lamb, and the shedding of his blood upon me. If I be still under consultation, I am not condemned yet; if I be sent to these books, I shall not be condemned at all; for, though there be something written in some of those books (particularly in the Scriptures) which some men turn to poison, yet upon these consultations (these confessions, these takings of our particular cases into thy consideration) thou intendest all for physic; and even from those sentences, from which a too late repenter will suck desperation, he that seeks thee early shall receive thy morning dew, thy seasonable mercy, thy forward consolation.

Look therefore upon me, O Lord, in this distress, and that will recall me from the borders of this bodily death; look upon me, and that will raise me again from that spiritual death in which my parents buried me when they begot me in sin, and in which I have pierced even to the jaws of hell, by multiplying such heaps of actual sins upon that foundation, that root of original sin. Yet take me again into your consultation, O blessed and glorious Trinity; and though the Father know that I have defaced his image received in my creation; though the Son know I have neglected mine interest in the redemption; yet, O blessed Spirit, as thou art to my conscience, so be to them, a witness that, at this minute, I accept that which I have so often, so rebelliously refused, thy blessed inspirations; be thou my witness to them that, at more pores than this slack body sweats tears, this sad soul weeps blood; and more for the displeasure of my God, than for the stripes of his displeasure. Take me then, O blessed and glorious Trinity, into a reconsultation, and prescribe me any physic. If it be a long and painful holding of this soul in sickness, it is physic if I may discern thy hand to give it; and it is physic if it be a speedy departing of this soul, if I may discern thy hand to receive it.

X. LENTE ET SERPENTI SATAGUNT OCCURRERE MORBO.

They find the Disease to steal on insensibly, and endeavour to meet with it so.

X. MEDITATION.

THIS is nature's nest of boxes: the heavens contain the earth; the earth, cities; cities, men. And all these are concentric; the common centre to them all is decay, ruin; only that is eccentric which was never made; only that place, or garment rather, which we can imagine, but not demonstrate. That light, which is the very emanation of the light of God, in which the saints shall dwell, with which the saints shall be apparelled, only that bends not to this centre, to ruin; that which was not made of nothing is not threatened with this annihilation. All other things are; even angels, even our souls; they move upon the same poles, they bend to the same centre; and if they were not made immortal by preservation, their nature could not keep them from sinking to this centre, annihilation. In all these (the frame of the heavens, the states upon earth, and men in them, comprehend all), those are the greatest mischiefs which are least discerned; the most insensible in their ways come to be the most sensible in their ends. The heavens have had their dropsy, they drowned the world; and they shall have their fever, and burn the world. Of the dropsy, the flood, the world had a foreknowledge one hundred and twenty years before it came; and so some made provision against it, and were saved; the fever shall break out in an instant, and consume all:

and that which is most secret is most dangerous. It is so also here in the societies of men, in states and commonwealths. Twenty rebellious drums make not so dangerous a noise as a few whisperers and secret plotters in corners. The cannon doth not so much hurt against a wall, as a mine under the wall; nor a thousand enemies that threaten, so much as a few that take an oath to say nothing. God knew many heavy sins of the people, in the wilderness and after, but still he charges them with that one, with murmuring; murmuring in their hearts secret disobediences, secret repugnances against his declared will; and these are the most deadly, the most pernicious. And it is so too with the diseases of the body; and that is my case. The pulse, the urine, the sweat, all have sworn to say nothing, to give no indication of any dangerous sickness. My forces are not enfeebled, I find no decay in my strength; my provisions are not cut off, I find no abhorring in mine appetite; my counsels are not corrupted nor infatuated, I find no false apprehensions to work upon mine understanding; and yet they see that invisibly, and I feel that insensibly the disease prevails. The disease hath established a kingdom, an empire in me, and will have certain arcana imperii, secrets of state, by which it will proceed, and not be bound to declare them. But yet against those secret conspiracies in the state, the magistrate hath the rack; and against these insensible diseases, physicians have their examiners; and those these employ now.

X. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, I have been told, and told by relation, by her own brother that did it, by thy servant Nazianzen, that his sister, in the vehemency of her prayer, did use to threaten thee with a holy importunity, with a pious impudency. I dare not do so, O God ; but as thy servant Augustine wished that Adam had not sinned, therefore that Christ might not have died, may I not to this one purpose wish that if the serpent, before the temptation of Eve, did go upright, and speak<sup>1</sup>, that he did so still, because I should the sooner hear him if he spoke, the sooner see him if he went upright? In his curse I am cursed too ; his creeping undoes me ; for howsoever he begin at the heel, and do but bruise that, yet he, and death in him, is come into our windows<sup>2</sup> ; into our eyes and ears, the entrances and inlets of our soul. He works upon us in secret, and we do not discern him ; and one great work of his upon us is to make us so like himself as to sin in secret, that others may not see us ; but his masterpiece is to make us sin in secret, so as that we may not see ourselves sin. For the first, the hiding of our sins from other men, he hath induced that which was his offspring from the beginning, a lie<sup>3</sup> ; for man is, in nature, yet in possession of some such sparks of ingenuity and nobleness, as that, but to disguise evil, he would not lie. The body, the sin, is says thy prophet, we conceive them in the dark, upon our bed, yet, says he, we do them in the light; there are many sins which we glory in doing, and would not do, if nobody should know them. Thy blessed servant Augustine confesses that he was ashamed of his shamefacedness and tenderness of conscience, and that he often belied himself with sins which he never did, lest he should be unacceptable to his sinful companions. But if we would conceal them (thy prophet found such a desire, and such a practice in some, when he said, Thou hast trusted in thy wickedness; and thou hast said, None shall see me<sup>6</sup>), yet can we conceal them? Thou, O God, canst hear of them by others: the voice of Abel's blood will tell thee of Cain's murder<sup>7</sup>; the heavens themselves themselves will tell thee, Heaven shall reveal his iniquity; a small creature alone shall do it, A bird of the air shall carry the voice, and tell the matter<sup>8</sup>; thou wilt trouble no informer, thou thyself revealedest Adam's sin to thyself<sup>9</sup>; and the manifestation of sin is so full to thee, as that thou shalt reveal all to all; Thou shalt bring every work to judgment, with every secret thing<sup>10</sup>; and there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed<sup>11</sup>. But, O my God, there is another way of knowing my sins, which thou lovest better than any of these; to know them by my confession. As physic works, so it draws the peccant humour to itself, that, when it is gathered together, the weight of itself may carry that humour away; so thy Spirit returns to my memory my former sins, that, being so recollected, they may pour out themselves by confession. When I kept silence, says thy servant David, day and night thy hand was heavy upon me<sup>12</sup>; but when I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord, thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Thou interpretest the very purpose of confession so well, as that thou scarce leavest any new mercy for the action itself. This mercy thou leavest, that thou arimest us thereupon against relapses into the sins which we have confessed. And that mercy which thy servant Augustine apprehends, when he says to thee, "Thou hast forgiven me those sins which I have done, and those sins which only by thy grace I have not done:" they were done in our inclination to them, and even that inclination needs thy mercy, and that mercy he calls a pardon. And these are most truly secret sins, because they were never done, and because no other man, nor I myself, but only thou knowest, how many and how great sins I have escaped by thy grace, which, without that, I should have multiplied against thee.

<sup>6</sup> Isaiah xlvii. 10.<sup>7</sup> Gen. iv. 10.<sup>8</sup> Eccles. x. 20.<sup>9</sup> Gen. iii. 8.<sup>10</sup> Eccles. xii. 14.<sup>11</sup> Matt. x. 26.<sup>12</sup> Psalm xxxii. 3--5.

X. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who as thy Son Christ Jesus, though he knew all things, yet said he knew not the day of judgment, because sin), but I know them so well as to know that nothing but thy mercy is so infinite as they. If the naming of sins of thought, word, and deed, of sins of omission and of action, of sins against thee, against my neighbour, and against myself, of sins unrepented, and sins relapsed into after repentance, of sins of ignorance, and sins against the testimony of my conscience, of sins against thy commandments, sins against thy Son's Prayer, and sins against our own creed, of sins against the laws of that church, and sins against the laws of that state in which thou hast given me my station ; if the naming of these sins reach not home to all mine, I know what will. O Lord, pardon me all those sins which thy Son Christ Jesus suffered for, who suffered for all the sins of all the world ; for there is no sin amongst all those which had not been my sin, if thou hadst not been my God, and antedated me a pardon in thy preventing grace. And since sin, in the nature of it, retains still so much of the author of it, that it is a serpent, insensibly insinuating itself into my soul, let thy brazen serpent (the contemplation of thy Son crucified for me) be evermore present to me, for my recovery against the sting of the first serpent ; that so, as I have a Lion against a lion, the Lion of the tribe of Judah against that lion that seeks whom he may devour, so I may have a serpent against a serpent, the wisdom of the serpent against the malice of the serpent, and both against that lion and serpent, forcible and subtle temptations, thy dove with thy olive, in thy ark, humility, and peace, and reconciliation to thee, by the ordinances of thy church. Amen.

XI. NOBILIBUSQUE TRAHUNT, A CINCTO CORDE, VENENUM, SUCCIS ET GEMMIS, ET QUE GENEROSA, MINISTRANT ARS, ET NATURA, INSTILLANT.

They use Cordials, to keep the Venom and Malignity of the Disease from the Heart.

XI. MEDITATION.

WHENCE can we take a better argument, a clearer demonstration, that all the greatness of this world is built upon opinion of others, and hath in itself no real being, nor power of subsistence, than from the heart of man? It is always in action and motion, still busy, still pretending to do all, to furnish all the powers and faculties with all that they have; but if an enemy dare rise up against it, it is the soonest endangered, the soonest defeated of any part. The brain will hold out longer than it, and the liver longer than that; they will endure a siege; but an unnatural heat, a rebellious heat, will blow up the heart, like a mine, in a minute. But howsoever, since the heart

superiors be not of stronger parts than themselves, that serve and obey them that are weaker. Neither doth this obligation fall upon us, by second dictates of nature, by consequences and conclusions arising out of nature, or derived from nature, by discourse (as many things bind us even by the law of nature, and yet not by the primary law of nature; as all laws of propriety in that which we possess are of the law of nature, which law is, to give every one his own, and yet in the primary law of nature there was no propriety, no meum et tuum, but an universal community over all; so the obedience of superiors is of the law of nature, and yet in the primary law of nature there was no superiority, no magistracy); but this contribution of assistance of all to the sovereign, of all parts to the heart, is from the very first dictates of nature, which is, in the first place, to have care of our own preservation, to look first to ourselves; for therefore doth the physician intermit the present care of brain or liver, because there is a possibility that they may subsist, though there be not a present and a particular care had of them, but there is no possibility that they can subsist, if the heart perish: and so when we seem to begin with others, in such assistances, indeed, we do begin with ourselves, and we ourselves are principally in our contemplation; and so all these officious and mutual assistances are but compliments towards others, and our true end is ourselves. And this is the reward of the pains of kings; sometimes they need the power of law to be obeyed; and when they seem to be obeyed voluntarily, they who do it do it for their own sakes. O how little a thing is all the greatness of man, and through how false glasses doth he make shift to multiply it, and magnify it to himself! And yet this is also another misery of this king of man, the heart, which is also applicable to the kings of this world, great men, that the venom and poison of every pestilential disease directs itself to the heart, affects that (pernicious affection), and the malignity of ill men is also directed upon the greatest and the best; and not only greatness but goodness loses the vigour of being an antidote or cordial against it. And as the noblest and most generous cordials that nature or art afford, or can prepare, if they be often taken and made familiar, become no cordials, nor have any extraordinary operation, so the greatest cordial of the heart, patience, if it be much exercised, exalts the venom and the malignity of the enemy, and the more we suffer the more we are insulted upon. When God had made this earth of nothing, it was but a little help that he had, to make other things of this earth: nothing can be nearer nothing than this earth; and yet how little of this earth is the greatest man! He thinks he treads upon the earth, that all is under his feet, and the brain that thinks so is but earth; his highest region, the flesh that covers that, is but earth, and even the top of that, that wherein so many Absaloms take so much pride, is but a bush growing upon that turf of earth. How little of the world is the earth! And yet that is heart? O thou, who saidst to Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him upon the earth<sup>2</sup>, shall my fear, shall my zeal, shall my jealousy, have leave to say to thee, Hast thou considered my heart, that there is not so perverse a heart upon earth; and wouldst thou have that, and shall I be thy son, thy eternal Son's coheir, for giving that? The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it<sup>3</sup>? He that asks that question makes the answer, I the Lord search the heart. When didst thou search mine? Dost thou think to find it, as thou madest it, in Adam? Thou hast searched since, and found all these gradations in the ill of our hearts, that every imagination of the thoughts of our hearts is only evil continually<sup>4</sup>. Dost thou remember this, and wouldst thou have my heart? O God of all light, I know thou knowest all, and it is thou<sup>5</sup> that declarest unto man what is his heart. Without thee, O sovereign Goodness, I could not know how ill my heart were. Thou hast declared unto me, in thy word, that for all this deluge of evil, that hath surrounded all hearts, yet thou soughtest and foundest a man after thine own heart<sup>6</sup>; that thou couldst and wouldst give thy people pastors according to thine own heart<sup>7</sup>; and I can gather out of thy word so good testimony of the hearts of men as to find single hearts, docile and apprehensive hearts; hearts that can, hearts that have learned; wise hearts in one place, and in another, in a great degree, wise, perfect hearts; straight hearts, no perverseness without; and clean hearts, no foulness within: such hearts I can find in thy word; and if my heart were such a heart, I would give thee my heart. But I find stony hearts too<sup>8</sup>, and

<sup>2</sup> Job, i. 8.<sup>3</sup> Jer. xvii. 9.<sup>4</sup> Gen. vi. 5.<sup>5</sup> Amos, iv. 14.<sup>6</sup> 1 Sam. xiii. 14.<sup>7</sup> Jer. iii. 15.<sup>8</sup> Ezek. xi. 19.

I have made mine such : I have found hearts that are snares<sup>9</sup> ; and I have conversed with such ; hearts that burn like ovens<sup>10</sup> ; and the fuel of lust, and envy, and ambition, hath inflamed mine ; hearts in which their masters trust, and he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool<sup>11</sup> ; his confidence in his own moral constancy and civil fortitude will betray him, when thou shalt cast a spiritual damp, a heaviness, and dejection of spirit upon him. I have found these hearts, and a worse than these, a heart into the which the devil himself is entered, Judas's heart<sup>12</sup>. The first kind of heart, alas, my God, I have not ; the last are not hearts to be given to thee. What shall I do ? Without that present I cannot be thy son, and I have it not. To those of the first kind thou givest joyfulness of heart<sup>13</sup>, and I have not that ; to those of the other kind thou givest faintness of heart<sup>14</sup> : and blessed be thou, O God, for that forbearance, I have not that yet. There is then a middle kind of hearts, not so perfect as to be given, but that the very giving mends them ; not so desperate as not to be accepted, but that the very accepting dignifies them. This is a melting heart<sup>15</sup>, the earnest of thy Spirit in my heart<sup>17</sup>; and thou givest earnest, thou wilt perform the bar. Nabal was confident upon his wine, but in the night his heart died within him<sup>18</sup>. Thou, O Lord, hast given me wormwood, and I have had some licence upon that; and thou hast cleared a morning for me again, and my heart is alive. David's heart smote him when he cut off the skirt from Saul<sup>19</sup>; and his heart smote him when he had numbered his men<sup>20</sup>: my heart hath struck me when I come to confess my sins; but that blow is not to death, because my sins are not to death, but my heart lives in thee. As long as I remain in this great hospital, this diseased world, as long as I remain in this mortal house, this flesh of mine, this heart, though prepared for thee, prepared by thee, will still be subject to the invasion of malign and pestilent vapours. I have my cordials in thy promise; when I shall see the plague of my heart, and pray unto thee in my house<sup>21</sup>, thou wilt preserve that heart from all the force of that infection; and the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep my heart and mind through Christ Jesus<sup>22</sup>.

XI. PRAYER.

ETERNAL and most gracious God, who inhabit thy upper house, the heavens, though there be many mansions, yet art alike and equally in every mansion; but here in thy lower house, though thou art all, yet art otherwise in some rooms thereof than in others; otherwise in thy church than in my chamber, and otherwise in thy sacraments than in my senses; so though thou be always present, and always working in every room of this thy house, my body, yet I humbly beseech thee to manifest always a more effectual presence in my heart than in the other offices. Into the house of thine anointed disloyal persons, traitors, will come; into thy house, the church, hypocrites and idolaters will come; into some rooms of this thy house, my body, temptations will come, infections will come; but be my heart thy bedchamber, O my God, and thither let them not enter. Job made a covenant with his eyes, but not his making of that covenant, but thy dwelling in his heart, enabled him to keep that covenant. Thy Son himself had a sadness in his soul to death, and he had a reluctance, a deprecation of death, in the approaches thereof; but he had his cordial too, Yet not my will, but thine be done. And as thou hast not delivered us, thine adopted sons, from these infectious temptations, so neither hast thou delivered us over to them, nor withheld thy cordials from us. I was baptized in thy cordial water, against original sin, and I have drunk of thy cordial blood, for my recovery from actual and habitual sin, in the other sacrament. Thou, O Lord,

<sup>17</sup> 2 Cor. i. 22.<sup>18</sup> 1 Sam. xxv. 37.<sup>19</sup> 1 Sam. xxiv. 5.<sup>20</sup> 2 Sam. xxiv. 10.<sup>21</sup> 1 Kings, viii. 38.<sup>22</sup> Phil. iv. 7.

I ask not, not in a wish, not in a thought. Infirmity of nature, curiosity of mind, are temptations that offer ; but a silent and absolute obedience to thy will, even before I know it, is my cordial. Preserve that to me, O my God, and that will preserve me to thee ; that, when thou hast catechised me with affliction here, I may take a greater degree, and serve thee in a higher place, in thy kingdom of joy and glory. Amen.

XII. _____ SPIRANTE COLUMBA
SUPPOSITA PEDIBUS, REVOCANTUR AD IMA VAPORES.

They apply Pigeons, to draw the Vapours from the Head.

XII. MEDITATION.

WHAT will not kill a man if a vapour will ? How great an elephant, how small a mouse destroys ! To die by a bullet is the soldier's daily bread ; but few men die by hail-shot. A man is more worth than to be sold for single money ; a life to be valued above a trifle. If this were a violent shaking of the air by thunder or by cannon, in that case the air is condensed above the thickness of water, of water baked into ice, almost petrified, almost made stone, and no wonder that kills ; but that which is but a vapour, and a vapour not forced but breathed, should kill, that our nurse should overlay us, and air that nourishes us should destroy us, but that it is a half atheism to murmur against Nature, who is God's immediate commissioner, who would not think himself miserable to be put into the hands of Nature, who does not only set him up for a mark for others to shoot at, but delights herself to blow him up like a glass, till she see him break, even with her own breath ? Nay, if this infectious vapour were sought for, or travelled to, as Pliny hunted after the vapour of Ætna, and dared and challenged Death, in the form of a vapour, to do his worst, and felt the worst, he died; or if this vapour were met withal in an ambush, and we surprised with it, out of a long shut well, or out of a new opened mine, who would lament, who would accuse, when we had nothing to accuse, none to lament against but fortune, who is less than a vapour? But when ourselves are the well that breathes out this exhalation, the oven that spits out this fiery smoke, the mine that spews out this suffocating and strangling damp, who can ever, after this, aggravate his sorrow by this circumstance, that it was his neighbour, his familiar friend, his brother, that destroyed him, and destroyed him with a whispering and a calumniating breath, when we ourselves do it to ourselves by the same means, kill ourselves with our own vapours? Or if these occasions of this self-destruction had any contribution from our own wills, any assistance from our own intentions, nay, from our own errors, we might divide the rebuke, and chide ourselves as much as them. Fevers upon wilful distempers of drink and surfeits, convulsions upon ring upon their finger, and some in their pen that they used to write with; some have beat out their brains at the wall of their prison, and some have eat the fire out of their chimneys<sup>1</sup>; and one is said to have come nearer our case than so, to have strangled himself, though his hands were bound, by crushing his throat between his knees. But I do nothing upon myself, and yet am mine own executioner. And we have heard of death upon small occasions, and by scornful instruments: a pin, a comb, a hair pulled, hath gangrened and killed; but when I have said a vapour, if I were asked again what is a vapour, I could not tell, it is so insensible a thing; so near nothing is that that reduces us to nothing. But extend this vapour, rarefy it; from so narrow a room as our natural bodies, to any politic body, to a state. That which is fume in us is, in a state, rumour; and these vapours in us, which we consider here pestilent and infectious fumes, are, in a state, infectious rumours, detracting and dishonourable calumnies, libels. The heart in that body is the king, and the brain his council; and the whole magistracy, that ties all together, is the sinews which proceed from thence; and the life of all is honour, and just respect, and due reverence; and therefore, when these vapours, these venomous rumours, are directed against these noble parts, the whole body suffers. But yet for all their privileges, they are not privileged from our misery; that as the vapours most pernicious to us arise in our own bodies, so do the most dishonourable rumours, and those that wound a state most arise at home. What ill air that I could have met in the street, what channel, what shambles, what dunghill, what vault, could have hurt me so much as these home-bred vapours? What fugitive, what almsman of any foreign state, can do so much harm as a detractor, <sup>1</sup> Coma. Latro, in Val. Max.

a libeller, a scornful jester at home? For as they that write of poisons, and of creatures naturally disposed to the ruin of man, do as well mention the flea as the viper<sup>3</sup>, because the flea, though he kill none, he does all the harm he can; so even these libellous and licentious jesters utter the venom they have, though sometimes virtue, and always power, be a good pigeon to draw this vapour from the head, and from doing any deadly harm there.

XII. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, as thy servant James, when he asks that question, What is your life? provides me my answer, It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away<sup>3</sup>; so, if he did ask me what is your death, I am provided of my answer, it is a vapour too; and why should it not be all one to me, whether I live or die, if life and death be all one, both a vapour? Thou hast made vapour so indifferent a thing, as that thy blessings and thy judgments are equally expressed by it, and is made by thee the hieroglyphic of both. Why person of Wisdom, is called so too; She is (that is, he is) the vapour of the power of God, and the pure influence from the glory of the Almighty<sup>7</sup>. Hast thou, thou O my God, perfumed vapour with thine own breath, with so many sweet acceptations in thine own word, and shall this vapour receive an ill and infectious sense? It must; for, since we have displeased thee with that which is but vapour (for what is sin but a vapour, but a smoke, though such a smoke as takes away our sight, and disables us from seeing our danger), it is just that thou punish us with vapours too. For so thou dost, as the wise man tells us, thou canst punish us by those things wherein we offend thee; as he hath expressed it there, by beasts newly created, breathing vapours<sup>8</sup>. Therefore that commination of thine, by thy prophet, I will show wonders in the heaven, and in the earth, blood and fire, and pillars of smoke<sup>9</sup>; thine apostle, who knew thy meaning best, calls vapours of smoke<sup>10</sup>. One prophet presents thee in thy terribleness so, There went out a smoke at his nostrils<sup>11</sup>, and another the effect of thine anger so, The house was filled with smoke<sup>12</sup>; and he that continues his prophecy as long as the world can continue, describes the miseries of the latter times so, Out of the bottomless pit arose a smoke, that darkened the sun, and out of that smoke came locusts, who had the power of scorpions<sup>13</sup>. Now all smokes begin in fire, and all these will end so too: the smoke of sin, and of thy wrath, will end in the fire of hell. But hast thou afforded us no means to evaporate these smokes, to withdraw these vapours? When thine angels fell from heaven, thou tookest into thy care the reparation of that place, and didst it by assuming, by drawing us thither; when we fell from thee here, in this world, thou tookest into thy care the reparation of this place too, and didst it by assuming us another way, by descending down to assume our nature, in thy Son. So that though our last act be an ascending to glory (we shall ascend to the place of angels), yet our first act is to go the way of thy Son, descending, and the way of thy blessed Spirit too, who descended in the dove. Therefore hast thou been pleased to afford us this remedy in nature, by this application of a dove to our lower parts, to make these vapours in our bodies to descend, and to make that a type to us, that, by the visitation of thy Spirit, the vapours of sin shall descend, and we tread them under our feet. At the baptism of thy Son, the Dove descended, and at the exalting of thine apostles to preach, the same Spirit descended. Let us draw down the vapours of our own pride, our own wits, our own wills, our own inventions, to the simplicity of thy sacraments and the obedience of thy word; and these doves, thus applied, shall make us live.

<sup>7</sup> Wisd. vii. 25. .<sup>8</sup> Wisd. xi. 18.<sup>9</sup> Joel, ii. 30.<sup>10</sup> Acts, ii. 19.<sup>11</sup> Psalm lxxviii. 8.<sup>12</sup> Isaiah, vi. 4.<sup>13</sup> Rev. ix. 2.

sacrifice for sin there, and through the gospel, and made it, and thy Spirit in it, a witness of thy Son's baptism there, so carry it, and the qualities of it, home to my soul, and imprint there that simplicity, that mildness, that harmlessness, which thou hast imprinted by nature in this creature. That so all vapours of all disobedience to thee, being subdued under my feet, I may, in the power and triumph of thy Son, tread victoriously upon my grave, and trample upon the lion and dragon<sup>14</sup> that lie under it to devour me. Thou, O Lord, by the prophet, callest the dove the dove of the valleys, but promisest that the dove of the valleys shall be upon the mountain<sup>15</sup>. As thou hast laid me low in this valley of sickness, so low as that I am made fit for that question asked in the field of bones, Son of man, can these bones live<sup>16</sup>? so, in thy good time, carry me up to these mountains, of which even in this valley thou affordest me a prospect, the mountain where thou dwellest, the holy hill, unto which none can ascend but he that hath clean hands, which none can have but by that one and that strong way of making them clean, in the blood of thy Son Christ Jesus. Amen.

XIII. INGENIUMQUE MALUM, NUMEROSO STIGMATE, FASSUS
PELLITUR AD PECTUS, MORBIQUE SUBURBIA, MORBUS.

The Sickness declares the Infection and Malignity thereof by Spots.

XIII. MEDITATION.

WE say that the world is made of sea and land, as though they were equal; but we know that there is more sea in the Western than in the Eastern hemisphere. We say that the firmament is full of stars, as though it were equally full; but we know that there are more stars under the Northern than under the Southern pole. We say the elements of man are misery and happiness, as though he had an equal proportion of both, and the days of man vicissitudinary, as though he had as many good days as ill, and that he lived under a perpetual equinoctial, night and day equal, good and ill fortune in the same measure. But it is far from that; he drinks misery, and he tastes happiness; he mows misery, and he gleans happiness; he journeys in misery, he does but walk in happiness; and, which is worst, his misery is positive and dogmatical, his happiness is but disputable and problematical: all men call misery misery, but happiness changes the name by the taste of man. In this accident that befalls me now, that this sickness declares itself by spots to be a malignant and pestilential disease, if there be a comfort in the declaration, that thereby the physicians see more clearly what to do, there may be as much discomfort in this, that the malignity may be so great, as that all that they can do shall do nothing: that an enemy declares himself

<sup>14</sup> Psalm xci. 13.

<sup>15</sup> Ezek. vii. 16.

<sup>16</sup> Ezek. xxxvii. 3.

st is remediless, and a weaker than that to know ch ill, and not to know that that is the worst. A nan is comforted with the birth of her son, her y is eased of a burden; but if she could protically read his history, how ill a man, perchance
 r ill a son, he would prove, she should receive a ater burden into her mind. Scarce any purchase
 t is not clogged with secret incumbrances; scarce happiness that hath not in it so much of the ure of false and base money, as that the alloy is re than the metal. Nay, is it not so (at least ch towards it) even in the exercise of virtues? I st be poor, and want, before I can exercise the tue of gratitude; miserable, and in torment, before I exercise the virtue of patience. How deep do we
 , and for how coarse gold! And what other touch-ne have we of our gold but comparison, whether be as happy as others, or as ourselves at other es? O poor step toward being well, when these ts do only tell us, that we are worse than we were e of before.

XIII. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, thou hast made this sick bed thine altar, and I have no other sacrifice to er but myself; and wilt thou accept no spotted crifice? Doth thy Son dwell bodily in this flesh, at thou shouldst look for an unspottedness here?
 is the Holy Ghost the soul of this body, as he is of y spouse, who is therefore all fair, and no spot in r<sup>1</sup>? or hath thy Son himself no spots, who hath our stains and deformities in him? or hath thy ouse, thy church, no spots, when every particular ab of that fair and spotless body, every particular ul in that church, is full of stains and spots? Thou

<sup>1</sup> Cant. iv. 7.

bidst us hate the garment that is spotted with the flesh<sup>2</sup>. The flesh itself is the garment, and it spotteth itself with itself. And if I wash myself with snow water, mine own clothes shall make me abominable<sup>3</sup>; and yet no man yet ever hated his own flesh<sup>4</sup>. Lord, if thou look for a spotlessness, whom wilt thou look upon? Thy mercy may go a great way in my soul, and yet not leave me without spots; thy corrections may go far, and burn deep, and yet not leave me spotless: thy children apprehended that, when they said, From our former iniquity we are not cleansed until this day, though there was a plague in the congregation of the Lord<sup>5</sup>. Thou rainest upon us, and yet dost not always mollify all our hardness; thou kindlest thy fires in us, and yet dost not always burn up all our dross; thou healest our wounds, and yet leavest scars; thou purgest the blood, and yet leavest spots. But the spots that thou hatest, are the spots that we hide. The carvers of images cover spots<sup>6</sup>, says the wise man; when we hide our spots, we become idolaters of our own stains, of our own foulnesses. But if my spots come forth by what the physician<sup>8</sup>; till we tell thee in our sickness we think ourselves whole, till we show our spots, thou appliest no medicine. But since I do that, shall I not, Lord, lift up my face without spot, and be steadfast, and not fear<sup>9</sup>? Even my spots belong to thy Son's body, and are part of that which he came down to this earth to fetch, and challenge, and assume to himself. When I open my spots, I do but present him with that which is his; and till I do so, I detain and withhold his right. When therefore thou seest them upon me, as his, and seest them by this way of confession, they shall not appear to me as the pinches of death, to decline my fear to hell (for thou hast not left thy holy one in hell, thy Son is not there); but these spots upon my breast, and upon my soul, shall appear to me as the constellations of the firmament, to direct my contemplation to that place where thy Son is, thy right hand.

XIII. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who, as thou givest all for nothing, if we consider any precedent merit in us, so givest nothing for nothing, if we consider the acknowledgment and thankfulness which thou lookest for after, accept my humble thanks, both for thy mercy, and for this particular mercy, that in thy judgment I can discern thy mercy, and find comfort in thy corrections. I know, O Lord, the ordinary discomfort that accompanies that phrase, "that the house is visited," and that, "that thy marks and thy tokens are upon the patient;" but what a wretched and disconsolate hermitage is that house which is not visited by thee, and what a waif and stray is that man that hath not thy marks upon him! These heats, O Lord, which thou hast brought upon this body, are but thy chafing of the wax, that thou mightst seal me to thee: these spots are but the letters in which thou hast written thine own name, and conveyed thyself to me; whether for a present possession, by taking me now, or for a future reversion, by glorifying thyself in my stay here, I limit not, I condition not, I choose not, I wish not, no more than the house or land that passeth by any civil conveyance. Only be thou ever present to me, O my God, and this bedchamber and thy bedchamber shall be all one room, and the closing of these bodily eyes here, and the opening of the eyes of my soul there, all one act.

<sup>8</sup> Matt. ix. 12.<sup>9</sup> Job, xi. 15.

XIV. IDQUE NOTANT CRITICIS MEDICI EVENISSE DIEBUS.

The Physicians observe these Accidents to have fallen upon the critical Days.

XIV. MEDITATION.

I WOULD not make man worse than he is, nor his condition more miserable than it is. But could I a superficies of air! All things are done in time too, but if we consider time to be but the measure of motion, and howsoever it may seem to have three stations, past, present, and future, yet the first and last of these are not (one is not now, and the other is not yet), and that which you call present, is not now the same that it was when you began to call it so in this line (before you sound that word present, or that monosyllable now, the present and the now is past). If this imaginary, half-nothing time, be of the essence of our happinesses, how can they be thought durable? Time is not so; how can they be thought to be? Time is not so; not so considered in any of the parts thereof. If we consider eternity, into that time never entered; eternity is not an everlasting flux of time, but time is a short parenthesis in a long period; and eternity had been the same as it is, though time had never been. If we consider, not eternity, but perpetuity; not that which had no time to begin in, but which shall outlive time, and be when time shall be no more, what a minute is the life of the durablest creature compared to that! and what a minute is man's life in respect of the sun's, or of a tree! and yet how little of our life is occasion, opportunity to receive good in; and how little of that occasion do we apprehend and lay hold of! How busy and perplexed a cobweb is the happiness of man here, that must be made up with a watchfulness to lay hold upon occasion, which is but a little piece of that which is nothing, time! and yet the best things are nothing without that. Honours, pleasures, possessions, presented to us out of time, in our decrepit and distasted and unapprehensive age, lose their office, and lose their name; they are not honours to us that shall never appear, nor come abroad into the eyes of the people, to receive honour from them who give it; nor pleasures to us, who have lost our sense to taste them; nor possessions to us, who are departing from the possession of them. Youth is their critical day, that judges them, that denominates them, that inanimates and informs them, and makes them honours, and pleasures, and possessions; and when they come in an unapprehensive age, they come as a cordial when the bell rings out, as a pardon when the head is off. We rejoice in the comfort of fire, but does any man cleave to it at midsummer? We are glad of the freshness and coolness of a vault, but does any man keep his Christmas there; or are the pleasures of the spring acceptable in autumn? If happiness be in the season, or in the climate, how much happier then are birds than men, who can change the climate, and accompany and enjoy the same season ever!

XIV. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, wouldst thou call thyself the ancient of days<sup>1</sup>, if we were not to call ourselves to an account for our days? Wouldst thou chide us for standing idle here all the day<sup>2</sup>, if we remove them from being of the essence of our salvation, thou leavest them for assistances, and for the exaltation of our devotion, to fix ourselves, at certain periodical and stationary times, upon the consideration of those things which thou hast done for us, and the crisis, the trial, the judgment, how those things have wrought upon us, and disposed us to a spiritual recovery and convalescence. For there is to every man a day of salvation, Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation<sup>6</sup>, and there is a great day of thy wrath<sup>7</sup>, which no man shall be able to stand in; and there are evil days before, and therefore thou warnest us, and arimest us, Take unto you the whole armour of God, that you may be able to stand in the evil day<sup>8</sup>. So far then our days must be critical to us, as that by consideration of them, we may make a judgment of our spiritual health, for that is the crisis of our bodily health. Thy beloved servant, St. John, wishes to Gaius, that he may prosper in his health, so as his soul prospers<sup>9</sup>; for if the soul be lean, the marrow of the body is but water; if the soul wither, the verdure and the good estate of the body is but an illusion, and the goodliest man a fearful ghost. Shall we, O my God, determine our thoughts, and shall we never determine our disputations upon our climacterical years, for particular men and periodical years, for the life of states and kingdoms, and never consider these in our long life, and our interest in the everlasting kingdom? We have exercised our curiosity in observing that Adam, the eldest of the eldest world, died in his climacterical year, and Shem, the eldest son of the next world, in his; Abraham, the father of the faithful, in his, and the blessed Virgin Mary, the garden where the root of faith grew, in hers. But

<sup>6</sup> 2 Cor. vi. 2.

<sup>7</sup> Rev. vi. 17.

<sup>8</sup> Eph. vi. 1.

<sup>9</sup> 3 John, 2.

they whose climacterics we observe, employed their observation upon their critical days, the working of thy promise of a Messias upon them. And shall we, O my God, make less use of those days who have more of them? We, who have not only the day of the prophets, the first days, but the last days, in which thou hast spoken unto us by thy Son<sup>10</sup>? We are the children of the day<sup>11</sup>, for thou hast shined in as full a noon upon us as upon the Thessalonians : they who were of the night (a night which they had superinduced upon themselves), the Pharisees, pretended, that if they had been in their fathers' days (those indicatory and judicatory, those critical days), they would not have been partakers of the blood of the prophets<sup>12</sup>; and shall we who are in the day, these days, not of the prophets, but of the Son, stone those prophets again, and crucify that Son again, for all those evident indications and critical judicatures which are afforded us? Those opposed adversaries of thy Son, the Pharisees, with the Herodians, watched a critical day; then when the state was incensed against him, they came to crucify him in this manner.

they had taken their critical days, to come in that and in that day, so Christ imposes a critical day upon them; From that day forth, says thy Spirit, no man durst ask him any more questions<sup>16</sup>. This, O my God, my most blessed God, is a fearful crisis, a fearful indication, when we will study, and seek, and find, what days are fittest to forsake thee in; to say, now religion is in a neutrality in the world, and this is my day, the day of liberty; now I may make new friends by changing my old religion, and this is my day, the day of advancement. But, O my God, with thy servant Jacob's holy boldness, who, though thou lamedst him, would not let thee go till thou hadst given him a blessing<sup>17</sup>; though thou have laid me upon my hearse, yet thou shalt not depart from me, from this bed, till thou have given me a crisis, a judgment upon myself this day. Since a day is as a thousand years with thee<sup>18</sup>, let, O Lord, a day be as a week to me; and in this one, let me consider seven days, seven critical days, and judge myself that I be not judged by thee. First, this is the day of thy visitation, thy coming to me; and would I look to be welcome to thee, and not entertain thee in thy coming to me? We measure not the visitations of great persons by their apparel, by their equipage, by the solemnity of their coming, but by their very coming; and therefore, howsoever thou come, it is a crisis to me, that thou wouldst not lose me who seekest me by any means. This leads me from my first day, thy visitation by sickness, to a second, to the light and testimony of my conscience. There I have an evening and a morning, a sad guiltiness in my soul, but yet a cheerful rising of thy Sun too; thy evenings and mornings made days in the creation, and there is no mention of nights; my sadnesses for sins are evenings, but they determine not in night, but deliver me over to the day, the day of a conscience dejected, but then rectified, accused, but then acquitted, by thee, by him who speaks thy word, and who is thy word, thy Son. From this day, the crisis and examination of my conscience, breaks out my third day, my day of preparing and fitting myself for a more especial receiving of thy Son in his institution of the Sacrament; in which day, though there be many dark passages and slippery steps to them who will entangle, and endanger themselves in unnecessary disputations, yet there are light hours enough for any man to go his whole journey intended by thee, to know that that bread and wine is not more really assimilated to my body, and to my blood, than the body and blood of thy Son is communicated to me in that action, and participation of that bread and that wine. And having, O my God, walked with thee these three days, the day of thy visitation, the day of my conscience, the day of preparing for this seal of reconciliation, I am the less afraid of the clouds or storms of my fourth day, the day of my dissolution and transmigration from

<sup>16</sup> Matt. xxii. 46.<sup>17</sup> Gen. xxxii. 26.<sup>18</sup> 2 Pet. iii. 8.

in our own bodies ; but they who have made just use of their former days be superinvested with glory ; whereas the others, condemned to their old clothes, their sinful bodies, shall have nothing added but immortality to torment. And this day of awaking me, and reinvesting my soul in my body, and my body in the body of Christ, shall present me, body and soul, to my sixth day, the day of judgment, which is truly, and most literally, the critical, the decretory day ; both because all judgment shall be manifested to me then, and I shall assist in judging the world then, and because then, that judgment shall declare to me, and possess me of my seventh day, my everlasting Sabbath in thy rest, thy glory, thy joy, thy sight, thyself ; and where I shall live as long without reckoning any more days after, as thy Son and thy Holy Spirit lived with thee, before you three made any days in the creation.

XIV. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who, though thou didst permit darkness to be before light in the creation, yet in the making of light didst so multiply that light, as that it enlightened not the day only, but the night too ; though thou have suffered some dimness, some clouds of sadness and disconsolateness to shed themselves upon my soul, I humbly bless and thankfully glorify thy holy name, that thou hast afforded me the light of thy Spirit, against which the prince of darkness cannot prevail, nor hinder his illumination of our darkest nights, of our saddest thoughts. Even the visitation of thy most blessed Spirit upon the blessed Virgin, is called an overshadowing. There was the presence of the Holy Ghost, the fountain of all light, and yet an overshadowing ; nay, except there were some light, there could be no shadow. Let thy merciful providence so govern all in this sickness, that I never fall into utter darkness, ignorance of thee, or inconsideration of myself; and let those shadows which do fall upon me, faintnesses of spirit, and condemnations of myself, be overcome by the power of thine irresistible light, the God of consolation; that when those shadows have done their office upon me, to let me see, that of myself I should fall into irrecoverable darkness, thy Spirit may do his office upon those shadows, and disperse them, and establish me in so bright a day here, as may be a critical day to me, a day wherein and whereby I may give thy judgment upon myself, and that the words of thy Son, spoken to his apostles, may reflect upon me, Behold, I am with you always, even to the end of the world<sup>30</sup>.

XV. INTEREA INSOMNES NOCTES, EGO DUCO, DIESQUE.

I sleep not Day nor Night.

XV. MEDITATION.

presentation of death, God, who wrought and perfected his work before nature began (for nature was but his apprentice, to learn in the first seven days, and now is his foreman, and works next under him), and, I say, intended sleep only for the refreshing of us by bodily rest, and not for a figure of death, for he intended not death itself then. But man having abused death upon himself, God hath taken man's nature, death, into his hand, and mended it; and whereas it hath in itself a fearful form and aspect, so that man is afraid of his own creature, God presents it to him in a familiar, in an assiduous, in an agreeable and acceptable form, in sleep; that so when he awakes from sleep, and says to himself, "Shall I be no other-se when I am dead, than I was even now when I was asleep?" he may be ashamed of his waking dreams, and of his melancholy fancying out a horrid and an rightful figure of that death which is so like sleep. And then we need sleep to live out our threescore and ten years, so we need death to live that life which we cannot outlive. And as death being our enemy, God shows us to defend ourselves against it (for we victual ourselves against death twice every day, as often as we eat), so God having so sweetened death unto us, when he hath in sleep, we put ourselves into our enemy's hands once every day, so far as sleep is death; and sleep is as much death as meat is life. This then is the misery of my sickness, that death, as it is produced from me, and is mine own creature, is now before mine eyes, but in that form in which God hath mollified it to us, and made it acceptable, in sleep I cannot see it. How many prisoners, who have even hollowed themselves their graves upon that earth on which they have lain long under heavy fetters, yet at this time are asleep, though they be yet working upon their own graves by their own weight! He that hath seen his friend die to-day, or knows he sha

it to-morrow, yet will sink into a sleep bet
I cannot, and oh, if I be entering now into ete where there shall be no more distinction of I why is it all my business now to tell clocks? W none of the heaviness of my heart dispensed into eyelids, that they might fall as my heart doth?
why, since I have lost my delight in all objects, c
I discontinue the faculty of seeing them by closing eyes in sleep? But why rather, being entering that presence where I shall wake continually and sleep more, do I not interpret my continual w here, to be a parasceve and a preparation to that

XV. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, I know (for thou hast sa that he that keepeth Israel shall neither sh nor sleep<sup>1</sup>: but shall not that Israel, over whom watchest, sleep? I know (for thou hast said it there are men whose damnation sleepeth not<sup>2</sup> shall not they to whom thou art salvation sleep wilt thou take from them that evidence, and testimony, that they are thy Israel, or thou well in their sense? Let me not, O my God, take this too precisely, too literally; There is that neither lay nor night seeth sleep with his eyes<sup>8</sup>, says thy wise servant Solomon; and whether he speak that of worldly men, or of men that seek wisdom, whether in ustification or condemnation of their watchfulness, we cannot tell: we can tell that there are men that cannot sleep till they have done mischief<sup>9</sup>, and then they can; and we can tell that the rich man cannot sleep, because his abundance will not let him<sup>10</sup>. The ares were sown when the husbandmen were asleep<sup>11</sup>; and the elders thought it a probable excuse, a credible lie, that the watchmen which kept the sepulchre should say, that the body of thy Son was stolen away when they were asleep<sup>12</sup>. Since thy blessed Son rebuked his disciples for sleeping, shall I murmur because I do not sleep? If Samson had slept any longer in Gaza, he had been taken<sup>13</sup>; and when he did sleep longer with Delilah<sup>14</sup>, he was taken. Sleep is often taken for natural death in thy Scriptures, as for natural rest. Nay, sometimes sleep hath so heavy a sense, as to be taken for sin itself<sup>15</sup>, as well as for the punishment of sin, death<sup>16</sup>. Much comfort is not in much sleep, when the most fearful and most irrevocable malediction is presented by thee in a perpetual sleep. I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunk, and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake<sup>17</sup>. I must therefore, O my God, look rather than into the very act of sleeping, before I misinterpret my waking; for since I find thy whole land light, shall any finger of that hand seem heavy? Since the whole sickness is thy physic, shall any accident in it be my poison by my murmuring? The name of watchmen belongs to our profession; thy prophets are not only seers, endued with a power of seeing, able to see, but watchmen evermore in the act of seeing. And therefore give me leave, O my blessed God, to invert the words of thy Son's spouse: she said, I sleep, but my heart waketh<sup>18</sup>; I say, I wake, but my heart sleepeth: my body is in a sick weariness, but my soul in a peaceful rest with thee; and as our eyes in our health see not the air that is next them, nor the fire, nor the spheres, nor stop upon any thing till they come to stars, so my eyes that are open, see nothing of this world, but pass through all that, and fix themselves upon thy peace, and joy, and glory above. Almost as soon as thy apostle had said, Let us not sleep<sup>19</sup>, lest we should be too much discomforted if we did, he says again, Whether we wake or sleep, let us live together with Christ<sup>20</sup>. Though then this absence of sleep may argue the presence of death (the original may exclude the copy, the life the picture), yet this gentle sleep and rest of my soul ation belongs ; do thou, who only art the Physician of my soul, tell her, that thou wilt afford her such defensatives, as that she shall wake ever towards thee, and yet ever sleep in thee, and that, through all this sickness, thou wilt either preserve mine understanding from all decays and distractions which these watchings might occasion, or that thou wilt reckon and account with me from before those violences, and not call any piece of my sickness a sin. It is a heavy and indelible sin that I brought into the world with me ; it is a heavy and innumerable multitude of sins which I have heaped up since ; I have sinned behind thy back (if that can be done), by wilful abstaining from thy congregations, and omitting thy service, and I have sinned before thy face, in my hypocrisies in prayer, in my ostentation, and the mingling a respect of myself in preaching thy word ; I have sinned in my fasting, by repining when a penurious fortune hath kept me low ; and I have sinned even in that fulness, when I have been at thy table, by a negligent examination, by a wilful prevarication, in receiving that heavenly food and physic. But as I know, O my gracious God, that for all those sins committed since, yet thou wilt consider me, as I was in thy purpose when thou wrotest my name in the book of life, in mine election ; so into what deviations soever I stray and wander by occasion of this sickness, O God, return thou to that minute wherein thou wast pleased with me, and consider me in that condition.

<sup>8</sup> Eccles. viii. 16.<sup>9</sup> Prov. iv. 16.<sup>10</sup> Eccles. v. 12.<sup>11</sup> Matt. xiii. 25; xxviii. 13.<sup>12</sup> Matt. xxvi. 40.<sup>13</sup> Judges, xvi. 3.<sup>14</sup> Judges, xvi. 19.<sup>15</sup> Eph. v. 14.<sup>16</sup> 1 Thes. v. 6.<sup>17</sup> Jer. li. 57.

XVI. ET PROPERARE MEUM CLAMANT, E TURRE PROPINQUA,
OBSTREPERE CAMPANÆ ALIORUM IN FUNERE, FUNUS.

From the Bells of the Church adjoining, I am daily remembered of my Burial in the Funerals of others.

XVI. MEDITATION.

WE have a convenient author<sup>1</sup>, who writ a discourse of bells when he was prisoner in Turkey. How would he have enlarged himself if he had been my fellow-prisoner in this sick bed, so near to that steeple which never ceases, no more than the harmony of the spheres, but is more heard. When the Turks took Constantinople, they melted the bells into ordnance; I have heard both bells and ordnance, but never been so much affected with those as with these bells. I have lain near a steeple<sup>2</sup> in which there are said to be more than thirty bells, and near another, where there is one so big, as that the clapper is said to weigh more than six hundred pounds<sup>3</sup>, yet never so affected as here. Here the bells can scarce solemnize

the inevitableness of the danger by that. It rung once when no man was sick, but the next day one of the house fell from the steeple and died, and the bell held the reputation of a prophet still. If these bells that warn to a funeral now, were appropriated to none, may not I, by the hour of the funeral, supply? How many men that stand at an execution, if they would ask, For what dies that man? should hear their own faults condemned, and see themselves executed by attorney? We scarce hear of any man preferred, but we think of ourselves, that we might very well have been that man; why might not I have been that man that is carried to his grave now? Could I fit myself to stand or sit in any man's place, and not to lie in any man's grave? I may lack much of the good parts of the meanest, but I lack nothing of the mortality of the weakest; they may have acquired better abilities than I, but I was born to as many infirmities as they. To be an incumbent by lying down in a grave, to be a doctor by teaching mortification by example, by dying, though I may have seniors, others may be older than I, yet I have proceeded apace in a good university, and gone a great way in a little time, by the furtherance of a vehement fever, and whomsoever these bells bring to the ground to-day, if he and I had been compared yesterday, perchance I should have been thought likelier to come to this preferment than he. God hath kept the power of death in his own hands, lest any man should bribe death. If man knew the gain of death, the ease of death, he would solicit, he would provoke death to assist him by any hand which he might use. But as when men see many of their own professions preferred, it ministers a hope that that may light upon them; so when these hourly bells tell me of so many funerals of men like me, it presents, if not a desire that it may, yet a comfort whensoever mine shall come.

XVI. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, I do not expostulate with but with them who dare do that; who expostulate with thee, when in the voice of thy c thou givest allowance to this ceremony of be funerals. Is it enough to refuse it, because it v use among the Gentiles? so were funerals too. because some abuses may have crept in am Christians? Is that enough, that their ringing been said to drive away evil spirits? Truly, t so far true, as that the evil spirit is vehemently in their ringing, therefore, because that action t the congregation together, and unites God an people, to the destruction of that kingdom whic evil spirit usurps. In the first institution o church in this world, in the foundation of thy mi church amongst the Jews, thou didst appoin calling of the assembly in to be by trumpet<sup>5</sup> when they were in, then thou gavest them the of bells in the garment of thy priest<sup>6</sup>. In the t phant church, thou employest both too, but i inverted order; we enter into the triumphant c yesterday; why ring they now? A man, that is a world, is all the things in the world; he is an army, and when an army marches, the van may lodge to-night where the rear comes not till to-morrow. A man extends to his act and to his example; to that which he does, and that which he teaches: so do those things that concern him, so do these bells; that which rung yesterday was to convey him out of the world in his van, in his soul; that which rung to-day was to bring him in his rear, in his body, to the church; and this continuing of ringing after his entering is to bring him to me in the application. Where I lie I could hear the psalm, and did join with the congregation in it; but I could not hear the sermon, and these latter bells are a repetition sermon to me. But, O my God, my God, do I that have this fever need other remembrances of my mortality? Is not mine own hollow voice, voice enough to pronounce that to me? Need I look upon a death's head in a ring, that have one in my face? or go for death to my neighbour's house, that have him in my bosom? We cannot, we cannot, O my God, take in too many helps for religious duties: I know I cannot have any better image of thee than thy Son, nor any better image of him than his Gospel; yet must not I with thanks confess to thee, that some historical pictures of his have sometimes put me upon better meditations than otherwise I should have fallen upon? I know thy church needed not to have taken in, from Jew or Gentile, any supplies for the exaltation of thy glory, or our devotion; of absolute necessity I know she needed not; but yet we owe thee our thanks, that thou hast given her leave to do so, and that as, in making us Christians, thou didst not destroy that which we were before, natural men, so, in the exalting of our religious devotions now we are Christians, thou hast been pleased to continue to us those assistances which did work upon the affections of natural men before ; for thou lovest a good man as thou lovest a good Christian ; and though grace be merely from me, yet thou dost not plant grace but in good natures.

XVI. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who having consecrated our living bodies to thine own Spirit, and made us temples of the Holy Ghost, dost also require a respect to be given to these temples, even when the priest is gone out of them, to these bodies when the soul is departed from them, I bless and glorify thy name, that as thou takest care in our life of every hair of our head, so dost thou also of every grain of ashes after our death. Neither dost thou only do good to us all in life and death, but also wouldst have us do good to one another, as in a holy life, so in those things which accompany our death. In that contemplation I make account that I hear this dead brother of ours, who is now carried out to his righteous, die to sin ; which death is a resurrection to a new life. Thou killest and thou givest life : which-soever comes, it comes from thee ; which way soever it comes, let me come to thee.

XVII. NUNC LENTO SONITU DICUNT, MORIERIS.

Now, this Bell tolling softly for another, says to me, Thou must die.

XVII. MEDITATION.

PERCHANCE he for whom this bell tolls may be so ill, as that he knows not it tolls for him ; and perchance I may think myself so much better than I am, as that they who are about me, and see my state, may have caused it to toll for me, and I know not that. The church is Catholic, universal, so are all her actions ; all that she does belongs to all. When she baptizes a child, that action concerns me ; for that child is thereby connected to that head which is my head too, and ingrafted into that body whereof I am a member. And when she buries a man, that action concerns me : all mankind is of one author, and is one volume ; when one man dies, one chapter is not torn out of the book, but translated into a better language ; and every chapter must be so translated ; God employs several translators ; some pieces are translated by age, some by sickness, some by war, some by justice ; but God's hand is in every translation, and his hand shall bind up all our scattered leaves again, for that library where every book shall lie open to one another. As therefore the bell that rings to a sermon, calls not upon the preacher only, but upon the congregation to come, so this bell calls us all ; but how much more me, who am brought so near the door by this sickness. There was a contention as far as a suit (in which both piety and dignity, religion and estimation, were mingled), which of the religious orders should ring to prayers first in the morning; and it was determined, that they should ring first that rose earliest. If we understand aright the dignity of this bell that tolls for our evening prayer, we would be glad to make it ours by rising early, in that application, that it might be ours as well as his, whose indeed it is. The bell doth toll for him that thinks it doth; and though it intermit again, yet from that minute that that occasion wrought upon him, he is united to God. Who casts not up his eye to the sun when it rises? but who takes off his eye from a comet when that breaks out? Who bends not his ear to any bell which upon any occasion rings? but who can remove it from that bell which is passing a piece of himself out of this world? No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main. If a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as well as if a manor of thy friend's or of thine own were: any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind, and therefore use of it, except we get nearer and nearer our home, heaven, by it. Another man may be sick too, and sick to death, and this affliction may lie in his bowels, as gold in a mine, and be of no use to him; but this bell, that tells me of his affliction, digs out and applies that gold to me: if by this consideration of another's danger I take mine own into contemplation, and so secure myself, by making my recourse to my God, who is our only security.

XVII. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, is this one of thy ways of drawing light out of darkness, to make him for whom this bell tolls, now in this dimness of his sight, to become a superintendent, an overseer, a bishop, to as many as hear his voice in this bell, and to give us a confirmation in this action? Is this one of thy ways, to raise strength out of weakness, to make him who cannot rise from his bed, nor stir in his bed, come home to me, and in this sound give me the strength of healthy and vigorous instructions? O my God, my God, what thunder is not a well-tuned cymbal, what hoarseness, what harshness, is not a clear organ, if thou be pleased to set thy voice to it? And what organ is not well played on if thy hand be upon it? Thy voice, thy hand, is in this sound, and in this one sound I hear this whole concert. I hear thy Jacob call unto his sons and say, Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you what shall befall you in the last days<sup>1</sup>: he says, That which I am now, you must be then. I hear thy Moses telling me, and all within the compass of this sound, This is the blessing wherewith I bless you before my death<sup>2</sup>; this, that before your death, you would consider your own in mine. I hear thy prophet saying to Hezekiah, Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die, and not live<sup>3</sup>: he makes use of his family, and calls this a setting of his house in order, to compose us to the meditation of death. I hear thy apostle saying, I think it meet to put you in remembrance, knowing that shortly I must go out of this tabernacle<sup>4</sup>: this is the publishing of his will, and this bell is our legacy, the applying of his present condition to our use. I hear that which makes all sounds music, and all music perfect; I hear thy Son himself saying, Let not your hearts be troubled<sup>5</sup>; only I hear this change, that whereas thy Son says there, I go to prepare a place for you, this man in this sound says, I send to prepare you for a place, for a grave. But, O my God, my God, since heaven is glory and joy, why do not glorious and joyful things lead us, induce us to heaven? Thy legacies in thy first will, in the Old Testament, were plenty and victory, wine and oil, milk and honey, alliances of friends, ruin of enemies, peaceful hearts and cheerful countenances, and by these galleries thou broughtest them into thy bedchamber, by these

<sup>1</sup> Gen. xlix. 1.<sup>2</sup> Deut. xxxiii. 1.

glories and joys to the joys and glories of heaven

comparison of the joylessness and the ingloriousness of this world? I know, my God, it is far, far otherwise. As thou thyself, who art all, art made of no substances, so the joys and glory which are with thee are made of none of these circumstances, essential joy, and glory essential. But why then, my God, wilt thou not begin them here? Pardon, O God, this unthankful rashness; I that ask why thou dost not, find even now in myself, that thou dost; such joy, such glory, as that I conclude upon myself, upon all, they that find not joy in their sorrows, glory in their dejections in this world, are in a fearful danger of missing both in the next.

XVII. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who hast been pleased to speak to us, not only in the voice of nature, who speaks in our hearts, and of thy word, which speaks to our ears, but in the speech of speechless creatures, in Balaam's ass, in the speech of unbelieving men, in the confession of Pilate, in the speech of the devil himself, in the recognition and attestation of thy Son, I humbly accept thy voice in the sound of this sad and funeral bell. And first, I bless thy glorious name, that in this sound and voice I can hear thy instructions, in another man's to consider mine own condition; and to know, that this bell which tolls for another, before it come to ring out, may take in me too. As death is the wages of sin, it is due to me; as death is the end of sickness, it belongs to me; and though so disobedient a servant as I may be afraid to die, yet to so merciful a master as thou I cannot be afraid to come; and therefore into thy hands, O my God, I commend my spirit, a surrender which I know thou wilt accept, whether I live or die; for thy servant David made it*, when he put himself into thy protection for his life; and thy blessed Son made it, when he delivered up his soul at his death: declare thou thy will upon me, O Lord, for life or death in thy time; receive my surrender of myself now; into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit. And being thus, O my God, prepared by thy correction, mellowed by thy chastisement, and conformed to thy will by thy Spirit, having received thy pardon for my soul, and asking no reprieve for my body, I am bold, O Lord, to bend my prayers to thee for his assistance, the voice of whose bell hath called me to this devotion. Lay hold upon his soul, O God, till that soul have thoroughly considered his account; and how few minutes soever it have to remain in that body, let the power of thy Spirit recompense the shortness of time, and perfect his account before he pass away: present his sins so to him, as that he may know what thou forgivest, and not doubt of thy forgiveness; let him stop upon the infiniteness of those sins, but dwell upon the infiniteness of thy mercy; let him discern his own demerits, but wrap himself up in me, hear thy Son crying to thee, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? and forsake him not; but with thy left hand lay his body in the grave (that be thy determination upon him), and with thy right hand receive his soul into thy kingdom, and unite him and us in one communion of saints. Amen.

XVIII. _____ AT INDE
MORTUUS ES, SONITU CELERI, PULSUQUE AGITATO.

The Bell rings out, and tells me in him, that I am dead.

XVIII. MEDITATION.

THE bell rings out, the pulse thereof is changed; the tolling was a faint and intermitting pulse, on one side; this stronger, and argues more and better life. His soul is gone out, and as a man who had a lease of one thousand years after the expiration of a short one, or an inheritance after the life of a man in a consumption, he is now entered into the possession of his better estate. His soul is gone, either? Who saw it come in, or who saw it go out? Nobody; yet everybody is sure he had one, and hath one. If I will ask mere philosophers what the soul

I shall find amongst them that will tell me, it is nothing but the temperament and harmony, and just and equal composition of the elements in the body, which produces all those faculties which we ascribe to the soul; and so in itself is nothing, no separable substance that overlives the body. They see the soul nothing else in other creatures, and they affect an pious humility to think as low of man. But if my soul were no more than the soul of a beast, I could not think so; that soul that can reflect upon itself, consider itself, is more than so. If I will ask, not mere philosophers, but mixed men, philosophical divines, how the soul, being a separate substance, enters into man, I shall find some that will tell me, that it is by generation and procreation from parents, because they think it hard to charge the soul with the guiltiness of original sin, if the soul were infused into a body, in which it must necessarily grow foul, and contract original sin, whether it will or no; and I shall find some that will tell me, that it is by immediate infusion from God, because they think it hard to maintain an immortality in such a soul, as should be begotten and derived with the body from mortal parents. If I will ask, not a few men, but almost whole bodies, whole churches, what becomes of the souls of the righteous at the departing thereof from the body, I shall be told by some, that they attend an expiation, a purification in a place of torment; by some, that they attend the fruition of the sight of God in a place of rest, but yet but of expectation; by some, that they pass to an immediate possession of the presence of God. St. Augustine studied the nature of the soul as much as any thing, but the

whither he is gone. But yet I have one nearer me than all these, mine own charity ; I ask that, and that tells me he is gone to everlasting rest, and joy, and glory. I owe him a good opinion ; it is but thankful charity in me, because I received benefit and instruction from him when his bell tolled ; and I, being made the fitter to pray by that disposition, wherein I was assisted by his occasion, did pray for him ; and I pray not without faith ; so I do charitably, so I do faithfully believe, that that soul is gone to everlasting rest, and joy, and glory. But for the body, how poor a wretched thing is that ! we cannot express it so fast, as it grows worse and worse. That body, which scarce three minutes since was such a house, as that that soul, which made but one step from thence to heaven, was scarce thoroughly content to leave that for heaven ; that body hath lost the name of a dwelling-house, because none dwells in it, and is making haste to lose the name of a body, and dissolve to putrefaction. Who would not be affected to see a clear and sweet river in the morning, grow a kennel of muddy land-water by noon, and condemned to the saltness of the sea by night ? and how lame a picture, how faint a representation is that, of the precipitation of man's body to dissolution ! Now all the parts built up, and knit by a lovely soul, now but a statue of clay, and now these limbs melted off, as if that clay were but snow ; and now the whole house is but a handful of sand, so much dust, and but a peck of rubbish, so much bone. If he who, as this bell tells me, is gone now, were some excellent artificer, who comes to him for a cloak or for a garment now ? or for counsel, if he were a lawyer ? if a magistrate, for justice ? Man, before he hath his immortal soul, hath a soul of sense, and a soul of vegetation before that : this immortal soul did not forbid other souls to be in us before, but when this soul departs, it carries all with it ; no more vegetation, no more sense. Such a mother-in-law is the earth, in respect of our natural mother ; in her womb we grew, and when she was delivered of us, we were planted in some place, in some calling in the world ; in the womb of the earth we diminish, and when she is delivered of us, our grave opened for another ; we are not transplanted, but transported, our dust blown away with profane dust, with every wind.

XVIII. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, if expostulation be too bold a word, do thou mollify it with another ; let it be wonder in myself, let it be but problem to others ; but let me ask, why wouldst thou not suffer those that serve thee in holy services, to do any office about the dead<sup>1</sup>, nor assist at their funeral ? Thou hadst no counsellor, thou needest none ; thou hast no controller, thou admittest none. Why do I ask ? In ceremonial things (as that was) any convenient reason is enough ; who can be sure to propose that reason, that moved thee in the institution thereof ? I satisfy myself with this ; that in those times the Gentiles were over-full of an over-reverent respect to the memory of the dead : a great part of the idolatry of the nations flowed from that ; an over-amorous devotion, an over-zealous celebrating, and over-studious preserving of the memories, and the pictures of some dead persons ; and by the vain glory of men, they entered into the world<sup>2</sup>, and their statues and pictures contracted an opinion of divinity by age : that which was at first but a picture of a friend grew a god in time, as the wise man notes, They called them gods, which were the work of an ancient hand<sup>3</sup>. And some have assigned a certain time, when a picture should come out of minority, and be at age to be a god in sixty years after it is made. Those images of men that had life, and some idols of other things which never had any being, are by one common name called promiscuously dead; and for that the wise man reprehends the idolater, for health he prays to that which is weak, and for life he prays to that which is dead<sup>4</sup>. Should we do so? says thy prophet<sup>5</sup>; should we go from the living to the dead? So much ill then being occasioned by so much religious compliment exhibited to the dead, thou, O God (I think), wouldst therefore inhibit thy principal holy servants from contributing any thing at all to this dangerous intimation of idolatry; and that the people might say, Surely those dead men are not so much to be magnified as men mistake, since God will not suffer his holy officers so much as to touch them, not to see them. But those dangers being removed, thou, O my God, dost certainly allow, that we should do offices of piety to the dead, and that we should draw instructions to piety from the dead. Is not this, O my God, a holy kind of raising up seed to my dead brother, if I, by the meditation of his death, produce a better life in myself? It is the blessing upon Reuben, Let Reuben live, and not die, and let not his men be few<sup>6</sup>; let him propagate many. And it is a malediction, That that dieth, let it die<sup>7</sup>, let it do no good in dying; for trees without fruit, thou, by thy apostle, callest twice dead<sup>8</sup>. It is a second death, if none live the better by me after my death, by the manner of my death. Therefore may I justly think, that thou madest that a way to convey to the Egyptians a fear of thee, and a fear of death, that there was not a house where there was not one dead<sup>9</sup>; for thereupon the Egyptians said, servant David's wife said to him, to be said If thou save not thy life to-night, to-morrow shalt be slain<sup>11</sup>. If the death of this man wo upon me now, I shall die worse than if thou had afforded me this help ; for thou hast sent him bell to me, as thou didst send to the angel of with commission to strengthen the things th main, and that are ready to die<sup>12</sup>, that in this ness of body I might receive spiritual streng these occasions. This is my strength, that w thou say to me, as thine angel said to Gideon, be unto thee, fear not, thou shalt not die<sup>13</sup> ; o ther thou say, as unto Aaron, Thou shalt die th yet thou wilt preserve that which is ready to c soul, from the worst death, that of sin. Zim for his sins, says thy Spirit, which he sinned in evil ; and in his sin which he did to make sin<sup>15</sup> ; for his sins, his many sins, and then sin, his particular sin. For my sins I shall die soever I die, for death is the wages of sin ; but die in my sin. in that particular sin of resisti they refused the light offered), You shall die in your sin<sup>16</sup>: and then when they proceeded to farther disputations, and vexations, and temptations, he adds, You shall die in your sins<sup>17</sup>; he multiplies the former expression to a plural. In this sin, and in all your sins, doth not the resisting of thy particular helps at last draw upon us the guiltiness of all our former sins? May not the neglecting of this sound ministered to me in this man's death, bring me to that misery, as that I, whom the Lord of life loved so as to die for me, shall die, and a creature of mine own shall be immortal; that I shall die, and the worm of mine own conscience shall never die<sup>18</sup>?

<sup>1</sup> Levit. xxi. 1.<sup>2</sup> Wisd. xiv. 14.<sup>3</sup> Wisd. xiii. 10.

<sup>4</sup> Wisd. xiii. 18,<sup>5</sup> Isaiah, viii. 19.<sup>6</sup> Deut. xxxiii. 6.<sup>7</sup> Zech. xi. 9.<sup>8</sup> Jude 12.<sup>9</sup> Exod. xii. 30.

XVIII. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, I have a new occasion of thanks, and a new occasion of prayer to thee from the ringing of this bell. Thou toldest me in the other voice that I was mortal, and approaching to death; in this I may hear thee say, that I am dead in an irremediable, in an irrecoverable state for bodily health. If that be thy language in this voice, how infinitely am I bound to thy heavenly Majesty for speaking so plainly unto me? for even that voice, that I must die now, is not the voice of a judge, that speaks by way of condemnation, but of a physician, that presents health in that. Thou presentest me death as the cure of my disease, not as the exaltation of it; if I mistake thy voice herein, if I overrun thy pace, and prevent thy hand, and imagine death more instant upon me than thou hast bid him be, yet the voice belongs to me; I am dead, I was born dead, and from the first laying of these mud walls in my conception, they have mouldered away, and the whole course of life is but an active death. Whether given us such a portion of heaven, as that thou dispute whether thy saints in heaven do know we in earth in particular do stand in need without all disputation, we upon earth do know thy saints in heaven lack yet for the consummation of their happiness, and therefore thou hast afforded them the dignity that we may pray for them. That for this soul, now newly departed to thy kingdom, may quickly return to a joyful reunion to thee, which it hath left, and that we with it may soon have the full consummation of all in body and soul, I beseech at thy hand, O our most merciful God, for the sake of our Son Christ Jesus. That that blessed soul may have the consummation of his dignity, entering into his last office, the office of a judge, may have society of human bodies in heaven, as he hath had ever of souls; and that as thou hatest sin itself, thy hate to sin may be expressed in abolishing of all instruments of sin, the allurements of this world, and the world itself; and all the temptations and revenges of sin, the stings of sickness and of

<sup>16</sup> John, viii. 21.<sup>17</sup> John, viii. 24.<sup>18</sup> Isaiah, lxvi. 24.

¶ OCEANO TANDEM EMENSO, ASPICIANDA RESURGIT TERRA; IDENT, JUSTIS, MEDICI, JAM COCTA MEDERI SE POSSE, INDICIIS.

last the Physicians, after a long and stormy Voyage, see Land: they have so good Signs of the Concoction of the Disease, as that they may safely proceed to purge.

XIX. MEDITATION.

ALL this while the physicians themselves have been patients, patiently attending when they could see any land in this sea, any earth, any cloud, any indication of concoction in these waters. Any order of mine, any pretermission of theirs, exalts a disease, accelerates the rages of it; no diligence accelerates the concoction, the maturity of the disease; they must stay till the season of the sickness come, and till it be ripened of itself, and then they may put their hand to gather it before it fall off, but they cannot hasten the ripening. Why should we look for a cure in a disease, which is the disorder, the discord, the irregularity, the commotion, and rebellion of the body? were scarce a disease if it could be ordered and made obedient to our times. Why should we look for a cure that in disorder, in a disease, when we cannot have a cure in nature, who is so regular and so pregnant, so forward to bring her work to perfection and to light? yet we cannot awake the July flowers in January, nor retard the flowers of the spring to autumn. We cannot bid the fruits come in May, nor the leaves to wither on in December. A woman that is weak cannot tarry off her ninth month to a tenth for her delivery, nor say she will stay till she be stronger; nor a queen cannot hasten it to a seventh, that she may be ready for some other pleasure. Nature (if we look for durable and vigorous effects) will not admit preventions, nor anticipations, nor obligations upon her, for they are precontracts, and she will be left to her liberty. Nature would not be spurred, nor forced to mend her pace; nor power, the power of man, greatness, loves not that kind of violence neither. There are of them that will give, that will do justice, that will pardon, but they have their own seasons for all these, and he that knows not them shall starve before that gift come, and ruin before the justice, and die before the pardon save him. Some tree bears no fruit, except much dung be laid about it; and justice comes not from some till they be richly manured: some trees require much visiting, much watering, much labour; and some men give not their fruits but upon importunity: some trees require incision, and pruning, and lopping; some men must be intimidated and syndicated with commissions, before they will deliver the fruits of justice: some trees require the early and the often access of the sun; some men open not, but upon the favours and letters of court mediation: some trees must be housed and kept within besieged do know the best of their defences, and do not know the worst of their enemy's power; when they cannot mend their works within, and the enemy can increase his numbers without. O how many far more miserable, and far more worthy to be less miserable than I, are besieged with this sickness, and lack their sentinels, their physicians to watch, and lack their munition, their cordials to defend, and perish before the enemy's weakness might invite them to sally, before the disease show any declination, or admit any way of working upon itself! In me the siege is so far slackened, as that we may come to fight, and so die in the field, if I die, and not in a prison.

XIX. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, thou art a direct God, may I not say a literal God, a God that wouldst be understood literally, and according to the plain sense of all that thou sayest? but thou art also (Lord, I intend it to thy glory, and let no profane misinterpreter abuse it to thy diminution), thou art a figurative, a metaphorical God too; a God in whose words there is such a height of figures, such voyages, such peregrinations to fetch remote and precious metaphors, such extensions, such spreadings, such curtains of allegories, such third heavens of hyperboles, so harmonious elocutions, so retired and so reserved expressions, so commanding persuasions, so persuading commandments, such sinews even in thy milk, and such things in thy words, as all profane authors seem of the seed of the serpent that creeps, thou art the Dove that flies. O, what words but thine can express the inexpressible texture and composition of thy word, in which to one man that argument that binds his faith to believe that to be the word of God, is the reverent simplicity of the word, and to another the majesty of the word; and in which two men equally pious may meet, and one wonder that all should not understand it, and the other as much that any man should. So, Lord, thou givest us the same earth to labour on and to lie in, a house and a grave of the same earth; so, Lord, thou givest us the same word for our satisfaction and for our inquisition, for our instruction and for our admiration too; for there are places that thy servants Hierom and Augustine would scarce believe (when they grew warm by mutual letters) of one another, that they understood them, and yet both Hierom and Augustine call upon persons whom they knew to be far weaker than they thought one another (old women and young maids) to read the Scriptures, without confining them to these or those places. Neither art thou thus a figurative, a metaphorical God in thy word only, but in thy works too. The style of thy works, the phrase of thine actions, is metaphorical. The institution of thy whole worship in the old law was a continual allegory; types and figures overspread all, and figures flowed into figures, and poured themselves out into farther figures; circumcision carried a figure of baptism, and baptism carries a figure of that purity which we shall have in perfection in the new Jerusalem. Neither didst thou speak and work in this language only in the time of thy prophets; but since thou spokest in thy Son it is so too. How often, how much more often, doth thy Son call himself a way, and a light, and a gate, and a vine, and bread, than the Son of God, or of man! How much oftener doth he exhibit a metaphorical Christ, than a real, a literal! This hath occasioned thine ancient servants, whose delight it was to write after thy copy, to proceed the same way in their expositions of the Scriptures, and in their composing both of public liturgies and of private prayers to thee, to make their accesses to thee in such a kind of language as thou wast pleased to speak to them, in a figurative, in a metaphorical language, in which manner I am bold to call the comfort which I receive now in this sickness in the indication of the concoction and maturity thereof, in certain clouds and recidences, which the physicians observe, a discovering of land from sea after a long and tempestuous voyage. But wherefore, O my God, hast thou presented to us the afflictions and calamities of this life in the name of waters? so often in the name of waters, and deep waters, and seas of waters? Must we look to be drowned? are they bottomless, are they boundless? That is not the dialect of thy language; thou hast given a remedy against the deepest water by water; against the inundation of sin by baptism; and the first life that thou gavest to any creatures was in waters: therefore thou dost not threaten us with an irremediableness when our affliction is a sea. It is so if we consider ourselves; so thou callest Genezareth, which was but a lake, and not salt, a sea; so thou callest the Mediterranean sea still the great sea, because the inhabitants saw no other sea; they that dwelt there thought a lake a sea, and the others thought a little sea the greatest, and we that know not the afflictions of others call our own the heaviest. But, O my God, that is truly great that overflows the channel; that is really a great affliction which is above my strength; but thou, O God, art my strength, and then what can be above it? Mountains shake with the swelling of thy sea<sup>1</sup>; secular mountains, men strong in power; spiritual mountains, men strong in grace, are shaken with afflictions; but thou layest up thy sea in store-houses<sup>2</sup>; even thy corrections are of thy treasure, and thou wilt not waste thy corrections; when they have done their service to humble thy patient wilt call them in again, for thou givest the decree, that the waters should not pass thy command<sup>3</sup>. All our waters shall run into Jordan thy servants passed Jordan dry foot<sup>4</sup>; they sh<sup>d</sup> into the red sea (the sea of thy Son's blood), a red sea, that red sea, drowns none of thine: but that sail on the sea tell of the danger thereof that am yet in this affliction, owe thee the glory speaking of it; but, as the wise man bids me, I may speak much and come short, wherefore I thou art all<sup>5</sup>. Since thou art so, O my God affliction is a sea too deep for us, what is our refuge? Thine ark, thy ship. In all other seas, in all afflictions, those means which thou hast ordained this sea, in sickness, thy ship is thy physician. thou hast made a way in the sea, and a safe path in the waters, showing that thou canst save from all dangers, yea, though a man went to sea without thee yet, where I find all that, I find this added; nevertheless thou wouldst not, that the work of thy hands should be idle<sup>6</sup>. Thou canst save without means, thou hast told no man that thou wilt; thou hast had not been in the ship with him, the gift had not extended to them. As soon as thy Son was come out of the ship, immediately there met him, out of the tombs, a man with an unclean spirit, and no man could hold him, no not with chains<sup>13</sup>. Thy Son needed no use of means; yet there we apprehend the danger to us, if we leave the ship, the means, in this use the physician. But as they are ships to us in these seas, so is there a ship to them too in which they are to stay. Give me leave, O my God, to assist myself with such a construction of these words of thy servant Paul to the centurion, when the mariners could have left the ship, Except these abide in the ship, you cannot be safe<sup>13</sup>: except they who are our ships, the physicians, abide in that which is theirs, and our ship, the truth, and the sincere and religious worship of thee and thy gospel, we cannot promise ourselves so good safety; for though we have our ship, the physician, he hath not his ship, religion; and means are not means but in their concatenation, they depend and are chained together. The ships are great, says thy apostle, but a helm turns them<sup>14</sup>; the men are learned, but their religion turns their labours to good, and therefore it was a heavy curse when the third part of the ships perished<sup>15</sup>: it is a heavy case where either all religion, or true religion, would forsake many of these ships whom thou hast sent to convey us over these seas. But, O my God, my God, since I have my ship and they theirs, I have them and they have thee, why are we yet no nearer and? As soon as thy Son's disciple had taken him into the ship, immediately the ship was at the land whither they went<sup>16</sup>. Why have not they and I this dispatch? Every thing is immediately done, which is done when thou wouldst have it done. Thy purpose terminates every action, and what was done before that is undone yet. Shall that slacken my hope? thy prophet from thee hath forbidden it. It is good that a man should both hope, and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord<sup>17</sup>. Thou puttest off many judgments till the last day, and many pass this life without any; and shall not I endure the putting off thy mercy for a day? And yet, O my God, thou puttest me not to that, for the assurance of future mercy is present mercy. But what is my assurance now? what is my seal? It is but a cloud; that which my physicians call a cloud, in that which gives them their indication. But a cloud? Thy great seal to all the world, the rainbow, that secured the world for ever from drowning, was but a reflection upon a cloud. A cloud itself was a pillar which guided the church<sup>18</sup>, and the glory of God not only was, but appeared in a cloud<sup>19</sup>. Let me return, O my God, to the consideration of thy servant Elijah's proceeding in a time of desperate drought<sup>20</sup>; he bids them look

<sup>1</sup> Psalm xli. 3.<sup>2</sup> Psalm xxxiii. 7.

<sup>13</sup> Mark, v. 2, 3.<sup>13</sup> Acts, xxvii. 31.<sup>14</sup> James, iii. 4.<sup>15</sup> Rev. viii. 9.<sup>16</sup> John, vi. 21.

IV. PRAYER.

ETERNAL and most gracious God, who though thou passedst over infinite millions of generations, before thou camest to a creation of this world, when thou beganst, didst never intermit that work, but continuedst day to day, till thou hadst perfected all the work, and deposed it in the hands of the Father, to have a rest of a sabbath, though thou have been pleased to glorify thyself in a long exercise of my patience, and in an expectation of thy declaration of thyself in this sickness, yet since thou hast now of thy goodness ordered that which affords us some hope, if that be the way of thy glory, proceed in that way, and perfect that work, and establish me in a sabbath and rest in thee, by this thy seal of bodily restitution. Thy steps came up to thee by steps in the temple; thy angels came down to Jacob by steps upon the ladder; find no stair by which thou thyself camest to Adam in paradise, nor to Sodom in thine anger; for thou, and thou only, art able to do all at once. But Lord, I am not weary of thy pace, nor weary of mine own patience. I provoke thee not with a prayer, nor with a wish, not with a hope, to more haste than thou sists with thy purpose, nor look that any other thing should have entered into thy purpose, but thy mercy. To hear thy steps coming towards me is the same comfort as to see thy face present with me; whether thou do the work of a thousand years in a day, or extend the work of a day to a thousand years, so long as thou workest, it is light and comfort. Heaven itself is but an extension of the same joy; and extension of this mercy, to proceed at thy leisure, the way of restitution, is a manifestation of heaven to me here upon earth. From that people to whom thou appearedst in signs and in types, the Jews, thou art departed, because they trusted in them; but from thy church, to whom thou hast appeared in thyself, in thy Son, thou wilt never depart, because we cannot trust too much in him. Though thou have afforded me these signs of restitution, yet if I confide in them, and begin to say, all was but a natural accident, and nature begins to discharge herself, and she will perfect the whole work, my hope shall vanish because it is not in thee. If thou shouldst take thy hand utterly from me, and have nothing to do with me, nature alone were able to destroy me; but if thou withdraw thy helping hand, alas, how frivolous are the helps of nature, how impotent the assistances of art! As therefore the morning dew is a pawn of the evening fatness, so, O Lord, let this day's comfort be the earnest of to-morrow's, so far as may conform me entirely to thee, to what end, and by what way soever thy mercy have appointed me.

XX. ID AGUNT.

Upon these Indications of a departed Mother, the deserved well of the state, to afford them that kind of statuary representation, which was then called Hermes, which was the head and shoulders of a man standing upon a cube, but those shoulders without arms and hands. Altogether it figured a constant supporter of the state, by his counsel; but in this hieroglyphic, which they made without hands, they pass their consideration no farther but that the counsellor should be without hands, so far as not to reach out his hand to foreign temptations of bribes, in matters of counsel, and that it was not necessary that the head should employ his own hand; that the same men should serve in the execution which assisted in the counsel; but that there should not belong hands to every head, action to every counsel, was never intended so much as in figure and representation. For as matrimony is scarce to be called matrimony, where there is a resolution against the fruits of matrimony, against the having of children<sup>1</sup>, so counsels are not counsels, but illusions, where there is from the beginning no purpose to execute the determinations of those counsels. The arts and sciences are most properly referred to the head; that is their proper element and sphere; but yet the art of proving, logic, and the art of persuading, rhetoric, are deduced to the hand, and that expressed by a hand contracted into a fist, and this by a hand enlarged and expanded; and evermore the power of man, and the power of God himself, is expressed so, All things are in his hand; neither is God so often presented to us, by names that carry our consideration upon counsel, as upon execution of counsel; he oftener is called the Lord of Hosts than by all other names, that may be referred to the other signification. Hereby therefore we take into our meditation the slippery condition of man, whose happiness in any kind, the defect of any one thing conducing to nature, a farther weakening. O dear price, strange way of addition, to do it by subtraction, restoring nature, to violate nature; of strength, by increasing weakness. Was I before? And is it a question of comfort to be now, did your physic make you sick? Was that my physic promised, to make me sick? another step upon which we may stand, and send into the misery of man, the time, the season of misery; it must be done now. O over-cunning watchful, over-diligent, and over-sociable man, that seldom comes alone, but then when to accompany other miseries, and so put one into the higher exaltation, and better heart ground even to an attenuation, and must provoke evacuation, all ways to exinanition and annihilation.

<sup>1</sup> August.

XX. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, the God of order, but of ambition, who assignest place to every one, but not contention for place, when shall it be thy pleasure to put an end to all these quarrels for precedences? When shall men leave their uncl who sees that, who searches those rolls?) whether believe or no, is it not therefore, O my God, that dost so frequently, so earnestly, refer us to the observation of actions? There is a little cision, a little imputation laid upon over-tedious dilatory counsels. Many good occasions slip in long consultations; and it may be a degree of to be too long in mending nets, though that be done. He that observeth the wind shall not and he that regardeth the clouds shall not<sup>2</sup>; that is, he that is too dilatory, too superstitious these observations, and studies but the excuse of his idleness in them; but that which the same wise royal servant of thine says in another place, all that, and ask no comment upon it, He becometh that dealeth with a slack hand, but the hand of diligent maketh rich<sup>3</sup>; all evil imputed to the conscience, all good attributed to the presence of the Lord. I know, my God (and I bless thy name for giving it, for all good knowledge is from thee), that thou considerest the heart; but thou takest not off thy eye till thou come to the hand. Nay, my God, not thy Spirit intimate that thou beginnest where thou begin (at least, that thou allowest us to begin), when thou orderest thine own answer to thine question, Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? thus, He that hath clean hands and a pure heart?<sup>4</sup> Dost thou not (at least) send us first to the law? And is not the work of their hands that declaration of their holy zeal, in the present execution of the law, of these idolaters, called a consecration of themselves<sup>5</sup>, by Holy Spirit? Their hands are called all themselves; for even counsel itself goes under that name; and in that word, who knowest best how to give right names:

<sup>2</sup> Eccles. xi. 4.<sup>3</sup> Prov. x. 4.<sup>4</sup> Psalm xxiv. 3.<sup>5</sup> Exod. xxxii. 29.

because the counsel of the priests assisted David. Saul says the hand of the priest is with David. That which is often said by Moses, is very often repeated by thy other prophets, These and those things the Lord spake, and the Lord said, and Lord commanded, not by the counsels, not by voice, but by the hand of Moses, and by the hand of the prophets. Evermore we are referred for evidence of others, and of ourselves, to the hand, action, to works. There is something before it, believing; and there is something after it, suffering; in the most eminent, and obvious, and conspicuous place stands doing. Why then, O my God, blessed God, in the ways of my spiritual strength come I so slow to action? I was whipped by thy law before I came to consultation, to consider my strength and shall I go no farther? As he that would describe a circle in paper, if he have brought that circle within one inch of finishing, yet if he remove his compass cannot make it up a perfect circle except he fall work again, to find out the same centre, so, thou setting that foot of my compass upon thee, I have

y easily be taken ; but not so pleasant as the virtue d nature of the medicine be extinguished<sup>9</sup>." I know
 m not submitted to such a confession as is a rack d torture of the conscience ; but I know I am not ampt from all. If it were merely problematical, t merely indifferent whether we should take this ysic, use this confession, or no, a great physician knowledges this to have been his practice, to minister ny things which he was not sure would do good,
 t never any other thing but such as he was sure uld do no harm<sup>10</sup>. The use of this spiritual physic n certainly do no harm ; and the church hath always ought that it might, and, doubtless, many humble uls have found, that it hath done them good. I will erefore take the cup of salvation, and call upon y name<sup>11</sup>. I will find this cup of compunction as full

I have formerly filled the cups of worldly confecns, that so I may escape the cup of malediction and ecoverable destruction that depends upon that. And ice thy blessed and glorious Son, being offered, in a way to his execution, a cup of stupefaction<sup>12</sup>, to ce away the sense of his pain (a charity afforded to ndemned persons ordinarily in those places and nes), refused that ease, and embraced the whole ment, I take not this cup, but this vessel of mine
 n sins into my contemplation, and I pour them out re according to the motions of thy Holy Spirit, and y where according to the ordinances of thy holy urch.

XX. PRAYER.

○ ETERNAL and most gracious God, who having married man and woman together, and made em one flesh, wouldst have them also to become one ul, so as that they might maintain a sympathy in

<sup>9</sup> Galen.<sup>10</sup> Galen.<sup>11</sup> Psalm cvi. 12.<sup>12</sup> Mark, xv. 23.

their affections, and have a conformity to c
in the accidents of this world, good or bad ;
married this soul and this body in me, beseech thee that my soul may look, and use of thy merciful proceedings towards restitution, and go the same way to a spirit
come, by thy goodness, to the use of thir
means for my body, to wash away tho humours that endangered it. I have, O L in my body, but a sea in my soul, and a into the depth of a deluge, above the sea.
raised up certain hills in me heretofore,
might have stood safe from these inundat
Even our natural faculties are a hill, preserve us from some sin. Education, st vation, example, are hills too, and might p from some. Thy church, and thy worc sacraments, and thine ordinances are l these ; thy spirit of remorse, and compur repentance for former sin, are hills too ;
top of all these hills thou hast brought me but this deluge, this inundation, is got at

XI. ————— ATQUE ANNUIT ILLE,
QUI, PER EOS, CLAMAT, LINQUAS JAM, LAZARE, LECTUM.

He prospers their Practice, and he, by them, calls Lazarus out of his Tomb, me out of my Bed.

XXI. MEDITATION.

If man had been left alone in this world at first, shall I think that he would not have fallen? If there had been no woman, would not man have served as his own tempter? When I see him now, subject to infinite weaknesses, fall into infinite sin, without any foreign temptations, shall I think he could have had none, if he had been alone? God saw man needed a helper, if he should be well; but to see woman ill, the devil saw that there needed a third. When God and we were alone in Adam, it was not enough; when the devil and we were alone in Eve, it was enough. O what a giant is man when he fights against himself, and what a dwarf when he needs or exercises his own assistance for himself! I cannot rise out of my bed till the physician enable me, nay, I cannot tell that I am able to rise till he tell me so. I do nothing, I know nothing of myself; how little and how impotent a piece of the world is any man! And how much less a piece of himself is that man! So little as that when it falls out (as it falls out in some cases) that more misery and more oppression should be an ease to a man, he cannot give himself that miserable addition of more misery. A man that is pressed to death, and might be eased by more thoughts, cannot lay those more weights upon himself: can sin alone, and suffer alone, but not repent, not be absolved, without another. Another tells me, I will rise; and I do so. But is every raising a preferinsufficiency will fill it ; nay, such an abhorring in nature of vacuity, that if there be but an tion of not filling in any man, that which imagination neither will fill it ; that is, rum voice, and it will be given out (upon no gro imagination, and no man knows whose imag

that he is corrupt in his place, or insufficien place, and another prepared to succeed hir place. A man rises sometimes and stan because he doth not or is not believed to fill h and sometimes he stands not because he ove place. He may bring so much virtue, so much so much integrity to the place, as shall spoil th burthen the place ; his integrity may be a li his predecessor, and cast an infamy upon him burthen upon his successor, to proceed by and to bring the place itself to an undervalue market to an uncertainty. I am up, and I stand, and I go round, and I am a new a of the new philosophy, that the earth moves why may I not believe that the whole earth

icycles, and other lesser circles, but yet circles; so those men which are raised and put into circles, few them move from place to place, and pass through any and beneficial places, but fall into little circles, and, within a step or two, are at their end, and not so all as they were in the centre, from which they were raised. Every thing serves to exemplify, to illustrate man's misery. But I need go no farther than myself: for a long time I was not able to rise; at last I must be raised by others; and now I am up, I am ready to sink lower than before.

XXL. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, how large a glass of the next world is this! As we have an art, to cast from one glass to another, and so to carry the species a great way off, so hast thou, that way, much more: we shall have a resurrection in heaven; the knowledge of that thou castest by another glass upon us here; we feel that we have a resurrection from sin, and that by another glass too; we see we have a resurrection of the body from the miseries and calamities of this life. This resurrection of my body shows me the resurrection of my soul; and both here severally, of both together hereafter. Since thy martyrs under the altar press thee with their solicitation for the resurrection of the body to glory, thou wouldst pardon me, if I should press thee by prayer for the accomplishing of this resurrection, which thou hast begun in me, to health. But, O my God, I do not ask, where I might ask amiss, nor beg that which perchance might be worse for me. I have a bed of sin; delight in sin is a bed: I have a grave of sin; senselessness of sin is a grave: and where Lazarus had been four days, I have been fifty years in this putrefaction; why dost thou not call me, as thou didst him, with a loud voice<sup>1</sup>, since

<sup>1</sup> John, xi. 43.

curred with thee to the making of man, there i speaking, but a saying. There, O blessed and Trinity, was none to hear but you three, easily hear one another, because you say the san
But when thy Son came to the work of red thou spokest<sup>2</sup>, and they that heard it toc thunder ; and thy Son himself cried with a lc upon the cross twice<sup>3</sup>, as he who was to pr coming, John Baptist, was the voice of a c not of a whisperer. Still, if it be thy voice, it voice. These words, says thy Moses, thou
with a great voice, and thou addedst no mo
he there. That which thou hast said is eviden is evident that none can speak so loud ; none
us to hear him, as we must thee. The Mc
uttered his voice. What was his voice ? T thundered from heaven<sup>5</sup>, it might be he this voice, thy voice, is also a mighty voi
only mighty in power, it may be heard, noi
in obligation, it should be heard, but mi operation, it will be heard ; and therefore h bestowed a whole psalm<sup>7</sup> upon us, to lead u consideration of thy voice. It is such a voice

re too curious of the instrument by what man God speaks; but thou speakest loudest when thou speakest to the heart. There was silence, and I heard a voice, says one, to thy servant Job<sup>10</sup>. I hearken after thy voice in thine ordinances, and I seek not a whispering in conventicles; but yet, O my God, speak louder, that so, though I do hear thee now, then I may hear nothing but thee. My sins cry aloud; Cain's murder did so: my afflictions cry aloud; the floods have lifted up their voice (and waters are afflictions), but thou, O Lord, art mightier than the voice of many waters<sup>11</sup>; than many temporal, many spiritual afflictions, than any of either kind: and why dost thou not speak to me in that voice? What is man, and whereto serveth he? What is his good and what is his evil<sup>12</sup>? My bed of sin is not evil, not desperately evil, for thou dost call me out of it; but my rising out of it is not good (not perfectly good), if thou call not louder, and hold me now I am up. O my God, I am afraid of a fearful application of those words, When a man hath done, then he beginneth<sup>13</sup>; when this body is unable to sin, his sinful memory sins over his old sins again; and that which thou wouldst have us to remember for compunction, we remember with delight. Bring him to me in his bed, that I may kill him<sup>14</sup>, says Saul of David: thou hast not said so, that is not thy voice. Joash's own servants slew him, when he was sick in his bed<sup>15</sup>: thou hast not suffered that, that my servants should so much as neglect me, or be weary of me in my sickness. Thou threatenest, that as a shepherd takes out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear, so shall the children of Israel, that dwell in Samaria, in the corner of the bed, and in Damascus, in a couch, be taken away<sup>16</sup>; that even they that are secure from danger shall perish. How much more might I, who was in the bed of death, die! But thou hast not so dealt with me. As they brought out sick persons in beds, that thy servant Peter's shadow might over-shadow them<sup>17</sup>, thou hast, O my God, over-shadowed me, refreshed me; but when wilt thou do more? When wilt thou do all? When wilt thou speak in thy loud voice? When wilt thou bid me take up my bed and walk<sup>18</sup>? As my bed is my affections, when shall I bear them so as to subdue them? As my bed is my afflictions, when shall I bear them so as not to murmur at them? When shall I take up my bed and walk? Not lie down upon it, as it is my pleasure, not sink under it, as it is my correction? But O my God, my God, the God of all flesh, and of all spirit, to let me be content with that in my fainting spirit, which thou declarest in this decayed flesh, that as this body is content to sit still, that it may learn to stand, and to learn by standing to walk, and by walking to travel, so my soul, by obeying this thy voice of rising, may by a

<sup>10</sup> Job, iv. 16.<sup>11</sup> Psalm xciii. 3, 4.<sup>12</sup> Eccclus. xviii. 8.<sup>13</sup> Eccclus. v. 7.<sup>14</sup> 1 Sam. xix. 15.<sup>15</sup> 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

made this bodily rising, by thy grace, an earnest of a second resurrection from sin, and of a third, to everlasting glory. Thy Son himself, always infinite in himself, and incapable of addition, was yet pleased to grow in the Virgin's womb, and to grow in stature, in the sight of men. Thy good purposes upon me, I know, have their determination and perfection in thy holy will upon me ; there thy grace is, and there I am altogether ; but manifest them so unto me, in thy seasons, and in thy measures and degrees, that I may not only have that comfort of knowing thee to be infinitely good, but that also of finding thee to be every day better and better to me ; and that as thou gavest Saint Paul the messenger of Satan, to humble him so for my humiliation, thou mayst give me thyself in this knowledge, that what grace soever thou afford me to-day, yet I should perish to-morrow if I had not had to-morrow's grace too. Therefore I beg of thee my daily bread ; and as thou gavest me the bread of sorrow for many days, and since the bread of hope for some, and this day the bread of possessing, in rising by that strength, which thou the God of all strength hast infused into me, so, O Lord, continue to me the bread of life : the spiritual bread of life, in a faithful assurance in thee ; the sacramental bread of life, in a worthy receiving of thee ; and the more real bread of life, in an everlasting union to thee. I know, O Lord, that when thou hast created angels, and they saw thee produce fowl, and fish, and beasts, and worms, they did not importune thee, and say, Shall we have no better creatures than these, no better companions than these ? but stayed thy leisure, and then had man delivered over to them, not much inferior in nature to themselves. No more do I, O God, now that by thy first mercy I am able to rise, importune thee for present confirmation of health ; nor now, that

...keep me therefore still, & my gracious in such a proportion of both strengths, as I may have something to thank thee for, which I received, and still something to pray for, and thy hand.

XXII. SIT MORBI FOMES TIBI CURA.

The Physicians consider the Root and Occasion Embers, and Coals, and Fuel of the Diseases seek to purge or correct that.

XXII. MEDITATION.

HOW ruinous a farm hath man taken, in himself! How ready is the house every fall down, and how is all the ground overspread weeds, all the body with diseases; where not only turf, but every stone bears weeds; not only muscle of the flesh, but every bone of the body some infirmity; every little flint upon the face of soil hath some infectious weed, every tooth in head such a pain as a constant man is afraid of yet ashamed of that fear of that sense of the How deep, and how often a wretched man may what infectious diseases from other men ! Adam might have had Paradise for dressing and keeping it ; and then his rent was not improved to such a labour as would have made his brow sweat ; and yet he gave it over : how far greater a rent do we pay for this farm, this body, who pay ourselves, who pay the farm itself, and cannot live upon it ! Neither is our labour at an end when we have cut down some weed as soon as it sprung up, corrected some violent and dangerous accident of a disease which would have destroyed speedily, nor when we have pulled up that weed from the very root, recovered entirely and soundly from that particular disease ; but the whole ground is of an ill nature, the whole soil ill disposed ; there are inclinations, there is a propenseness to diseases in the body, out of which, without any other disorder, diseases will grow, and so we are put to a continual labour upon his farm, to a continual study of the whole complexion and constitution of our body. In the distempers and diseases of soils, sourness, dryness, weeping, any kind of barrenness, the remedy and the physic is, for a great part, sometimes in themselves ; sometimes the very situation relieves them ; the hanger of a hill will surge and vent his own malignant moisture, and the turning of the upper turf of some ground (as health from cauterizing) puts a new and a vigorous youth into that soil, and there rises a kind of phoenix out of the ashes, a fruitfulness out of that which was barren before, and by that which is the barrenest of all, these. And where the ground cannot give itself physic, yet it receives physic from other grounds, from other soils, which are not the worse for having contributed that help to them from marl in other hills, or from slimy sand in other shores ; grounds help themselves, or hurt not other grounds from whence they receive help. But I have taken a farm at this hard rent, and upon those heavy covenants, that it can afford itself no help (no part of my body, if it were cut off, would cure another part; in some cases it might preserve a sound part, but in no case recover an infected); and if my body may have any physic, any medicine from another body, one man from the flesh of another man (as by mummy, or any such composition), it must be from a man that is dead, and not as in other soils, which are never the worse for contributing their marl or their fat slime to my ground. There is nothing in the same man to help man, nothing in mankind to help one another (in this sort, by way of physic), but that he who ministers the help is in as ill case as he that receives it would have been if he had not had it; for he from whose body the physic comes is dead. When therefore I took this farm, undertook this body, I undertook to drain not a marsh but a moat, where there was, not water mingled to offend, but all was water; I undertook to perfume dung, where no one part but all was equally unsavoury; I undertook to make such a thing wholesome, as was not poison by any manifest quality, intense heat or cold, but poison in the whole substance, and in the specific form of it. To cure the sharp accidents of diseases is a great work; to cure the disease itself is a greater; but to cure the body, the root, the occasion of diseases, is a work reserved for the great physician, which he doth never any other way but by glorifying these bodies in the next world.

XXII. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, what am I put to when I am put to consider and put off the root, the fuel, the occasion of my sickness? What Hippocrates, what Galen, could show me that in my body? It lies deeper than so, it lies in my soul; and deeper than so, for we may well consider the body before the soul came, before inanimation, to be without sin; and the soul, before it come to the body, before that infection, to be without sin: sin is the root and the fuel of all sickness, and yet that which destroys body and soul is in neither, but in both together. It is in the union of the body and soul, and, O my God, could I prevent that, or can I dissolve that? The root and the fuel of my sickness is my sin, my actual sin; but even that sin hath another root, another fuel, original sin; and can I divest that? Wilt thou bid me to separate the leaven that a lump of dough hath received, or the salt, that the water hath contracted, from the sea? Dost thou look, that I should so look to the fuel or embers of sin, that I never take fire? The whole world is a pile of fagots, upon which we are laid, and (as though there were no other) we are the bellows. Ignorance blows the fire. He that touched any unclean thing, though he knew it not, became unclean<sup>1</sup>, and a sacrifice was required (therefore a sin imputed), though it were done in ignorance<sup>2</sup>. Ignorance blows this coal; and then knowledge much more; for there are that know thy judgments, and yet not only do, but have pleasure in others that do against them<sup>3</sup>. Nature blows this coal; by nature we are the children of wrath<sup>4</sup>; and the law blows it; thy apostle Saint Paul saith that sin took occasion by the law, that therefore, because it is forbidden, we do some things. If we break the law, we sin; sin is the transgression of the law<sup>5</sup>; and sin itself becomes a law in our members<sup>6</sup>. Our fathers have imprinted the seed, infused a spring of sin in us. As a fountain casteth out her waters, we cast out our wickedness, but we

<sup>1</sup> Lev. v. 2.<sup>2</sup> Num. xv. 22.<sup>3</sup> Rom. i. 32.<sup>4</sup> Eph. ii. 3.<sup>5</sup> 1 John, iii. 4.<sup>6</sup> Rom. vii. 23.

THE DOCTRINE OF GRACE, AND THE WAY TO IT, AS IT WAS AN sin; when the judges sinned for Jezebel's sake<sup>1</sup> Joab to obey David<sup>12</sup>, it was an ambitious sin; Pilate sinned to humour the people<sup>13</sup>, and He give farther contentment to the Jews<sup>14</sup>, it popular sin. Any thing serves to occasion sin, at in my bosom, or abroad in my mark and aim which I am, and that which I am not, that w would be, proves coals, and embers, and fuel bellows to sin; and dost thou put me, O my G discharge myself of myself, before I can be When thou bidst me to put off the old 1
dost thou mean not only my old habits of actu but the oldest of all, original sin? When thou me purge out the leaven<sup>16</sup>, dost thou mean no
the sourness of mine own ill contracted customs, l innate tincture of sin imprinted by nature? Ho
I do that which thou requirest, and not falsif which thou hast said, that sin is gone over all O my God, I press thee not with thine own without thine own comment; I know that in th et a man may have such a knowledge of his own constitution and bodily inclination to diseases, as that he may prevent his danger in a great part; so, though we cannot assign the place of original sin, nor the nature of it, so exactly as of actual, or by any diligence divested, yet, having washed it in the water of thy baptism, we have not only so cleansed it, that we may the better look upon it and discern it, but so weakened it, that whatsoever it may retain the former nature, it doth not retain the former force, and though it may have the same name, it hath not the same venom.

XXII. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, the God of security, and the enemy of security too, who wouldst have us always sure of thy love, and yet wouldst have us always doing something for it, let me ways so apprehend thee as present with me, and yet follow after thee, as though I had not apprehended thee. Thou enlargedst Hezekiah's lease for fifteen years; thou renewedst Lazarus's lease for a time which we know not; but thou didst never so put out any of these fires as that thou didst not rake up the embers, and wrap up a future mortality in that body, which thou hadst then so reprieved. Thou proceedest no otherwise in our souls, O our good but fearful God; thou pardonest no sin, so as that that sinner can sin no more; thou makest no man so acceptable as that thou makest him impeccable. Though therefore it were a diminution of the largeness, and derogatory to the fullness of thy mercy, to look back upon the sins which in a true repentance I have buried in the wounds of thy Son, with a jealous or suspicious eye, as though they were now my sins, when I had so transferred them upon thy Son, as though they could now be used to life again, to condemn me to death, when mercy so to my soul, O my God, that I may decline to any faintness of spirit, in suspendence now to be less hearty, less sincere, than to be, to those who are perfectly reconciled nor presume so of it as either to think this mercy an antidote against all poisons, and so myself to temptations, upon confidence that mercy shall preserve me, or that when I myself into new sins, I may have new mercies time, because thou didst so easily afford me them

XXIII. METUSQUE, RELABI.

They warn me of the fearful Danger of re-

XXIII. MEDITATION.

IT is not in man's body, as it is in the
when the bell hath rung, to cover your rake up the embers, you may lie down and sleep fear. Though you have by physic and diet the embers of your disease, still there is a relapse; and the greater danger is in that.
pleasures and in pains, there is a propriety.
of truth, and a man is most affected with that bodily pains, in a fit of the stone, the patient wonders why any man should call the gout a pain ; and he that hath felt neither, but the toothache, is as much afraid of a fit of that, as either of the other, of either of the other. Diseases which we never felt in ourselves come but to a compassion of others that have endured them ; nay, compassion itself comes to no great degree if we have not felt in some proportion in ourselves that which we lament and condole in another. But when we have had those torments in their exaltation ourselves, we tremble at relapse. When we must pant through all those fiery heats, and sail through all those overflowing sweats, when we must watch through all those long nights, and mourn through all those long days (days and nights, so long as that Nature herself shall seem to be perverted, and to have put the longest day, and the longest night, which should be six months asunder, into one natural, unnatural day), when we must stand at the same bar, expect the return of physicians from their consultations, and not be sure of the same verdict, in any good indications, when we must go the same way over again, and not see the same issue, that is a state, a condition, a calamity, in respect of which any other sickness were a convalescence, and any greater, less. It adds to the affliction, that relapses are (and for the most part justly) imputed to ourselves, as occasioned by some disorder in us ; and so we are not only passive but active in our own ruin ; we do not only stand under a falling house, but pull it down upon us ; and we are not only executed (that implies guiltiness), but we are executioners (that implies dishonour), and executioners of ourselves (and that implies impiety). And we fall from that comfort which we might have in our first sickness, from that meditation, " Alas, how generally miserable is man, and how subject to diseases " (for in that it is some transferred from the body to the mind, and consideration of the sickness to that sin, and carelessness, by which I have occasioned it. And amongst the many weights that aggravate a relapse, this also is one, that a relapse proceeds more violent dispatch, and more irremediable, when it finds the country weakened, and depopulated. Upon a sickness, which as yet appears not scarce fix a fear, because we know not what it is, but as fear is the busiest and irksomest affection, a relapse (which is still ready to come) into it is but newly gone, the nearest object, the immediate exercise of that affection of fear.

XXIII. EXPOSTULATION.

MY God, my God, my God, thou mighty who hast been my physician; thou glorious who hast been my physic; thou blessed Spirit who hast prepared and applied all to me, shall I be able to overthrow the work of all you, and return into those spiritual sicknesses from which

and how vehemently thou insistedst in those into which they so often relapsed; those were their murmurings against thee, in thine instruments and ministers, and their turnings upon other gods, and embracing the idolatries of their neighbours. O my God, how slippery a way to how irrecoverable a bottom is murmuring; and how near thyself he comes, that murmurs at him who comes from thee! The magistrate is the garment in which thou apparelest thyself, and he that shoots at the clothes cannot say he meant no ill to the man: thy people were fearful examples of that, for how often did their murmuring against thy ministers end in a departing from thee! When they would have other officers, they would have other gods; and still to-day's murmuring was to-morrow's idolatry; as their murmuring induced idolatry, and they relapsed often into both, I have found in myself, O my God (O my God, thou hast found it in me, and thy finding it hast showed it to me) such a transmigration of sin, as makes me afraid of relapsing too. The soul of sin (for we have made sin immortal, and it must have a soul), the soul of sin is disobedience to thee; and when one sin hath been dead in me, that soul hath passed into another sin. Our youth dies, and the sins of our youth with it; some sins die a violent death, and some a natural; poverty, penury, imprisonment, banishment, kill some sins in us, and some die of age; many ways we become unable to do that sin, but still the soul lives and passes into another sin; and that that was licentiousness grows ambition, and that comes to indevotion and spiritual coldness: we have three lives in our state of sin, and where the sins of youth expire, those of our middle years enter, and those of our age after them. This transmigration of sin found in myself, makes me afraid, O my God, of a relapse; but the occasion of my fear is more pregnant than so, murmuring; but before thou chargest them

107
fault itself, in the same place thou chargest t
the iterating, the redoubling of that fault b fault was named; *How oft did they provo
the wilderness, and grieve me in the desert*
which brings thee to that exasperation again
as to say, that thou wouldst break thine rather than leave them unpunished (They see the land which I swore unto their fath because they had tempted thee ten times<sup>2</sup>, i upon that thou threatenest with that vehem
you do in anywise go back, know for a God will no more drive out any of thes from before you; but they shall be snares a unto you, and scourges in your sides, and your eyes, till ye perish<sup>3</sup>. No tongue but t O my God, can express thine indignation nation relapsing to idolatry. Idolatry in an is deadly, but when the disease is complicat relapse (a knowledge and a profession of recovery), it is desperate; and thine anger w only where the evidence is pregnant and exemption (so thou savest when it is said th

thine indignation stirred. In the government of thy servant Joshua, there was a voice, that Reuben and Gad, with those of Manasseh, had built a new altar<sup>5</sup>. Israel doth not send one to inquire, but the whole congregation gathered to go up to war against them<sup>6</sup>, and there went a prince of every tribe; and they object to them, not so much their present declination to idolatry, as their relapse: Is the iniquity of Peor<sup>7</sup> too little for us? an idolatry formerly committed, and punished with the slaughter of twenty-four thousand delinquents. At last Reuben and Gad satisfy them, that that altar was not built for idolatry, but built as a pattern of theirs, that they might thereby profess themselves to be of the same profession that they were, and so the army returned without blood. Even where it comes not so far as to an actual relapse into idolatry, thou, O my God, becomest sensible of it; though thou, who seest the heart all the way, preventest all dangerous effects where there was no ill meaning, however there were occasion of suspicious rumours given to thine Israel of relapsing. So odious to thee, and so aggravating a weight upon sin is a relapse. But, O my God, why is it so? so odious? It must be so, because he that hath sinned and then repented, hath weighed God and the devil in a balance; he hath heard God and the devil plead, and after hearing given judgment on that side to which he adheres by his subsequent practice<sup>8</sup>; if he return to his sin, he decrees for Satan, he prefers sin before grace, and Satan before God; and in contempt of God, declares the precedence for his adversary: and a contempt wounds deeper than an injury, a relapse deeper than a blasphemy. And when thou hast told me that a relapse is more odious to thee, need I ask why it is

<sup>5</sup> Josh. xxii. 11.<sup>7</sup> Numb. xxv. 4.<sup>6</sup> Josh. xxii. 12.<sup>8</sup> Tertullian.

man shall be worse than the beginning<sup>10</sup>, Word, thy Son ; my beginning was sickness
ment for sin : but a worse thing may follow
he also, if I sin again ; not only death, wh end worse than sickness, which was the b but hell, which is a beginning worse than Thy great servant denied thy Son<sup>12</sup>, and l him again, but all before repentance ; her relapse. O, if thou hadst ever readmitted A Paradise, how abstinently would he have v that tree ! And would not the angels that fixed themselves upon thee, if thou hadst o mitted them to thy sight ? They never relap do, must not my case be as desperate ? Not rate ; for as thy majesty, so is thy merc
infinite ; and thou, who hast commanded me my brother seventy-seven times, hast limited no number. If death were ill in itself, thou never have raised any dead man to life again that man must necessarily die again. If thy understanding did so far approximate a relapse as t

to my relapse out of presumption, but to preclude all accessess of desperation, though out of infirmity I should relapse.

XXIII. PRAYER.

O ETERNAL and most gracious God, who, though thou beest ever infinite, yet enlargest thyself by the number of our prayers, and takest our often petitions to thee to be an addition to thy glory and thy greatness, as ever upon all occasions, so now, O my God, I come to thy majesty with two prayers, two supplications. I have meditated upon the jealousy which thou hast of thine own honour, and considered that nothing comes nearer a violating of that honour, nearer to the nature of a scorn to thee, than to sue out thy pardon, and receive the seals of reconciliation to thee, and then return to that sin for which I needed and had thy pardon before. I know that this comes too near to a making thy holy ordinances, thy word, thy sacraments, thy seals, thy grace, instruments of my spiritual fornications. Since therefore thy correction hath brought me to such a participation of thyself (thyself, O my God, cannot be parted), to such an entire possession of thee, as that I durst deliver myself over to thee this minute, if this minute thou wouldst accept my dissolution, preserve me, O my God, the God of constancy and perseverance, in this state, from all relapses into those sins which have induced thy former judgments upon me. But because, by too lamentable experience, I know how slippery my customs of sin have made my ways of sin, I presume to add this petition too, that if my infirmity overtake me, thou forsake me not. Say to my soul, My son, thou hast sinned, do so no more<sup>14</sup>; but say also, that though I do, thy spirit of remorse and com-

<sup>14</sup> Eccclus. i. 21.

thy long-lived, thy everlasting mercy, will though that which I most earnestly against, should fall upon me, a relapse into those sins which I have truly repented, and thou hast fully pardoned.

<sup>15</sup> 2 Cor. xi. 25.

<sup>16</sup> 1 Tim. i. 19

A

SERMON OF COMMEMORATION

OF THE LADY DANVERS, LATE WIFE

OF SIR JOHN DANVERS, AND MOTHER OF GEORGE

HERBERT, PREACHED AT CHELSEA, WHERE

SHE WAS LATELY BURIED.

JULY 1, 1627.

BY JOHN DONNE,

DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S.

E PRAYER BEFORE THE SERMON.

ETERNAL and most glorious God, who sometimes in thy justice dost give the dead bodies of ints to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, he flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the so that their blood is shed like water, and is none to bury them<sup>1</sup>; who sometimes sellest eople for nought, and dost not increase thy by their price<sup>2</sup>; and yet never leavest us that knowledge, that precious in thy sight is ath of thy saints<sup>3</sup>, enable us, in life and death, sly to consider the value, the price of a soul. recious, O Lord, because thine image is stamped rinted upon it; precious, because the blood of on was paid for it; precious, because thy blessed , the Holy Ghost, works upon it, and tries it by vers fires; and precious, because it is entered hy revenue, and made a part of thy treasure. us not, therefore, O Lord, so to undervalue ves, nay, so to impoverish thee, as to give away souls, thy souls, thy dear and precious souls, for ig; and all the world is nothing if the soul must en for it. We know, O Lord, that our rent due e is our soul, and the day of our death is the nd our death-bed the place, where this rent is to id. And we know too, that he that hath sold his alm lxxix. 2.

<sup>2</sup> Psalm xliv. 12.

<sup>3</sup> Psalm cxvi. 15.

soul before for unjust gain, or given away his soul before in the society and fellowship of sin, or lent away his soul for a time by a lukewarmness and temporizing, to the dishonour of thy name, to the weakening of thy cause, to the discouraging of thy servants, he comes to that day and to that place, his death and death-bed, without any rent in his hand, without any soul, to this purpose, to surrender it unto thee. Let therefore, O Lord, the same hand which is to receive them then, preserve these souls till then; let that mouth that breathed them into us at first, breathe always upon them whilst they are in us, and suck them into itself when they depart from us. Preserve our souls, O Lord, because they belong to thee, and preserve our bodies because they belong to those souls. Thou alone dost steer our boat through all our voyage, but hast a more especial care of it, a more watchful eye upon it, when it comes to a narrow current or to a dangerous fall of waters. Thou hast a care of the preservation of these bodies, in all the ways of our life; but in the straits of death open thine eyes wider, and enlarge thy providence towards us so far, that no

meet at one place and at one day, a day that no night hall determine, the day of the glorious resurrection.
hasten that day, O Lord, for their sakes that beg it
; thy hands from under the altar in heaven ; hasten for our sakes, that groan under the manifold incum-rances of these mortal bodies ; hasten it for her sake hom we have lately laid down in this thy holy ground ;
nd hasten it for thy Son Christ Jesus' sake, to whom ien, and not till then, all things shall be absolutely bdued. Seal to our souls now an assurance of thy racious purpose towards us in that day, by accepting his day's service at our hands. Accept our humble hanks for all thy benefits, spiritual and temporal, lready bestowed upon us, and accept our humble prayers for the continuance and enlargement of them. Continue and enlarge them, O God, upon thine universal church, dispersed,
&c.

A SERMON OF COMMEMORATION

OF THE LADY DANVERS, LATE WIFE

OF SIR JOHN DANVERS.

Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

2 Pet. iii. 13.

[ PROPOSE to myself, and to this congregation, two works for this day; that we may walk together two miles in this sabbath day's journey; first, to instruct the living, and then to commemorate the dead; which office, as I ought, so I should have performed sooner, but that this sad occasion surprised me under other preobligations and precontracts in the services of mine own profession, which could not be excused nor avoided. And being come now to this double work, whether I look up to the throne of heaven and that firmament for my first work, the instruction of the living, or down to the stones of the grave and that pavement for my second work, the commemoration of the dead, I need no other words than these which I have read to you for both purposes: or to assist the resurrection of your souls I say, and to assure the resurrection of your bodies she says, Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. But first let us do our first work, and pursue the literal purpose of the apostle in these

shall pass away with a great noise, and we shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, the works that are therein, shall be burnt up (as he also said verse 10); though there be scorn put upon it by scoffers and jesters, and there be such a horror in the truth of the thing yet nevertheless, for all that, for all that scorn all that horror, we, we, says the text, we that in God, we that are not ignorant of this (as he says verse 8), that one day is with it as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; we that know that the Lord is not in his promise, though he be long-suffering toward (as he also says verse 9); we, according to his promises, that is, building upon that foundation of his Scriptures, presuming upon nothing that that evidence, and doubting of nothing that we expect, we look for something, says our text, we have not yet; we determine not ourselves contentment, in those things which God gives not in his temporal, not in his spiritual ble

and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. So when in this our voyage through this sea, which is truly Mediterranean sea, a sea betwixt two lands, the land of possession which we have, and the land of promise which we expect, this old and that new earth, that our days may be the better in this land which the Lord our God hath given us, and the surer in that land which the Lord our God will give us; in this sea voyage be these our landmarks by which we shall steer our whole course: first, the day of judgment is subject to scorn, some laugh at it; and then (in a second consideration) it induces horror, the best man, that is but man, trembles at it; but we (which is a third branch), those that have laid hold upon God; and (in a fourth place) have laid hold upon God by the right handle, according to his promises; we (which will constitute a fifth point), we expect, we bless God for our possession, but we look for a greater reversion, which reversion (in the next room) is new heavens and new earth; and (lastly) such heavens and such earth as may be an everlasting dwelling for righteousness. And through all these particulars we shall pass with as much clearness and shortness as the weight and number thereof will admit.

First then, to shake the constancy of a Christian there will always be scorers, jesters, scoffers, and mockers at religion. The period and consummation of the Christian religion, the judgment day, the second coming of Christ, will always be subject to scorns; and many times a scorn cuts deeper than a sword. Lucian wounded religion more by making jests at it, than Arius, or Pelagius, or Nestorius, with making arguments against it; for against those professed heretics, and against their studied arguments which might seem to have some weight, it well besemed those grave and reverend fathers of the church to call their vulgar and ordinary capacities than argume

and then learned men are not so earnest no
gent to overthrow and confute a jest or scorn are an argument, and so they pass more unco
and prevail further, and live longer, than ar
do. It is the height of Job's complaint, t temptible persons made jests upon him; and depth of Samson's calamity, that when the Pl hearts were merry, then they called for Sa make them sport<sup>1</sup>. So to the Israelites in when they were in that heaviness that ever they breathed was a sigh, their enemies calle them a song<sup>2</sup>. And so they proceeded with fulfilled in himself alone all types and im prophecies of sorrows, who was (as the prop him) Vir dolorum<sup>3</sup>, a man composed and e of sorrows, our Lord and Saviour Christ J
they platted a crown of thorns upon his h
they put a reed into his hand, and they b knee before him and mocked him<sup>4</sup>. Truly niving at several religions (as dangerous as it

that gives himself the liberty of jesting at religion, shall find it hard to take up at last; as when Julian the Apostate had received his death's wound, and could not choose but confess that that wound came from the hand and power of Christ, yet he confessed it in a phrase of scorn, Vicisti Galilæe, "The day is thine, Galilean," and no more. It is not, Thou hast accomplished thy purpose, O my God, nor O my Maker, nor O my Redeemer, but, in a style of contempt, Vicisti Galilæe, and no more. And therefore, David begins his psalms with blessedness, so he begins blessedness with that, Blessed is he which sitteth not in the seat of the scornful. David speaks there of walking with the ungodly, but walking is a laborious motion; and he speaks there of standing with the sinner, but standing is a painful posture. In these two, walking and standing, there is some intimation of a possibility of weariness, and so of desisting at last. But in sitting in the seat of the scornful, there denoted a sinning at ease, and in the Vulgate edition, at more than ease, with authority and glory; for it is In cathedra, in the chair of the scornful, which implies a magisterial, a doctoral kind of sinning, that is, to sin, and to provoke others by example to sin so, and promises no return from that position. For we have had divers examples, that men who have seduced and accustomed their mouths to oaths and blasphemies all their lives, have made it their last syllable and their last gasp, to swear they shall die; so they that enlarge and ungirt their wits in this jesting at religion, shall pass away at last in a negligence of all spiritual assistances, and not find half a minute between their last jest and their everlasting earnest. Væ vobis qui ridetis, "Woe be unto you that laugh so," for you shall weep, and weep eternally.

St. Paul preached of the resurrection of the dead, why do ye make a jest of this, says he, The heavens and the earth which are now, are : unto fire against the day of judgment apostle says, that in the last days perilous times come<sup>9</sup>; and he reckons there divers kinds of men, but yet these jesters are not among them then the apostle names more perilous men, spirits, and seducing by the doctrine of debidding meats and marriage<sup>10</sup>; and we know women are. Our Saviour tells us they shall p great way, they shall show great signs and they shall pretend miracles, and they shall false Christs, Christs kneaded into pieces c and we know who these are, and can beware proceedings. But St. Jude remembers us of the danger of all, Remember the words which spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Christ, that there should be mockers in time<sup>11</sup>; for against all the rest the church is better armed; but Perniciosissimum human says St. Augustine, this is the ruin and over people. When to all our sober preaching and serious riting, a scornful ignorant shall think it enough to ppose that one question of contempt, Where was our church before Luther? whereas, if we had had ay thing from Luther which we had not had before, et even that were elder than those articles which ey had from the Council of Trent, and had not (as rticles) before, for Luther's declarations were before e constitutions of that council; so that we could ay with them at their own game, and retort their wn scorns upon themselves, but that matters of eligion should move in a higher sphere, and not be epressed and submitted to jests. But though our ostle's prophecy must be fulfilled, There will be, and ill always be, some scoffers, some jesters; never-eless, says the text, there is a religious constancy pheld and maintained by others; and farther we tend not this first consideration of our danger.

But, though I can stand out these scorns and jests, ere is a temptation that is real; there are true rrors, sad apprehensions, substantial circumstances, at accompany the consideration of Christ's second oming and the day of judgment. It is a fearful ing to fall into the hands of the living God, if I o but fall into his hands in a fever in my bed, or in a ampest at sea, or in a discontent at home; but to fall nto the hands of the living God, so as that that iving God enters into judgment with me, and passes final and irrevocable judgment upon me, this is a onsternation of all my spirits, an extermination of all ny succours. I consider what God did with one vord, with one fiat he made all; and I know he can lo as much with another word, with one pereat he can lestroy all; as he spake and it was done, he com- nanded and all stood fast<sup>12</sup>; so he can speak and all thief". He says he will, and he does it; not Ecce veniam, but Ecce venio, Behold I upon thee as a thief<sup>16</sup>. There the future might imply a dilatoriness, is reduced to an present; it is so sure that he will do it, that to have done it already. I consider he will come as a thief, and then as a thief in the night; and only not know when that night shall be (for as he is the Son of man, knows not that), but only not know what night, that is which night what night, that is, what kind of night he may come, is said so often, so often repeated, that he will come as a thief in the night, as that he may mean at any night. In my night of ignorance he may come, he may come in my night of wantonness; in my night of inordinate and sinful melancholy and sorrow, by his mercy he may come, and he may come in my night of so stupid or so raging a sickness, as that he shall not come by coming; not come so as that he shall receive him in the absolution of his mind, but shall receive him in the participation of his body

<sup>12</sup> Psalm xxxiii. 9.

a deep impression of a great terror in me, when he came to that expression, that the heavens should pass away, cum stridore, with a great noise, and the elements melt with fervent heat, and the earth, and the works that are therein, shall be burnt up<sup>17</sup>; and when he adds in Isaiah, The Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots, like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury; for by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh<sup>18</sup>. So when he proceeds in Joel, A day of darkness and gloominess, and yet a fire devoureth before them, and a flame burneth behind them<sup>19</sup>. And so in Daniel also, His throne a fiery flame, and his wheels a burning fire, and a fiery stream issuing from him<sup>20</sup>. I consider too, that, with this stream of fire from him, there shall be a stream, a deluge, a flood of tears from us; and all that flood and deluge of tears shall not put out one coal, nor quench one spark of that fire. Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him; and, plangent omnes, all the kindreds of the earth shall wail and lament, and weep and howl because of him<sup>21</sup>. I consider that I shall look upon him then, and see all my sins, substance, and circumstance of sin, weight and measure of sin, heinousness and continuance of sin, all my sins imprinted in his wounds; and how shall I be affected then, confounded then, to see him so mangled with my sins? But then I consider again, that I shall look upon him again, and not see all my sins in his wounds; my forgotten sins, mine unconsidered, unconfessed, unrepented sins, I shall not see there; and how shall I be affected then, when I shall stand in judgment under the guiltiness of some sins not buried in the wounds, not drowned in the blood of my Saviour? Many and many, and there be these real terrors, nevertheless th

<sup>17</sup> 2 Pet. iii. 10.<sup>18</sup> Isaiah, lxvi. 15.<sup>19</sup> Joel, ii. 2, 3.<sup>20</sup> Dan. vii. 9.<sup>21</sup> Rev. i. 7.

we, certain privileged persons, and the con
of those persons is our third and next circur

To those who pretended an interest in C had none; to those who would exorcise poss sons, and cast out devils in the name of Jesu
any commission from Jesus; to those sons the devil himself could say, Qui vos? Jesu and Paul I know, but who are you<sup>22</sup>?
who live in an outward conformity to Chris seek their salvation in the light of nature, power of resisting temptations in their m stancy, the devil may boldly say, Qui vos
know, and the church I know, but who a would I had no worse enemies than you.
less we, for all his scorns, for all these ter have an answer to his qui vos, and be able t that we are that gens sancta, and that regu dotium that this apostle speaks of, that holy made holy by his covenant and ordinances;
roval priesthood. which. as priests. have an nor be deceived in them. We are that semen Dei that Malachi speaks of, the seed of God<sup>24</sup>, which he hath sowed in his church; and by that extraction we are consortes divinæ naturæ, partakers of the divine nature itself<sup>25</sup>, and so grow to be filii Dei, the sons of God; and by that title, coheredes Christi, joint heirs with Christ<sup>26</sup>; and so to be Christi ipsi, Christs ourselves, as God calls all his faithful, his anointed, his Christs<sup>27</sup>; and from thence we grow to that height, to be of the quorum in that commission, Dii estis, I have said you are gods, and not only gods by representation, but idem spiritus cum Domino, so become the same spirit with the Lord, that as a spirit cannot be divided in itself, so we are persuaded, that neither death nor life, nor any creature, shall be able to separate us from God<sup>28</sup>. If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant still<sup>29</sup>. If he will not study his own case, let him be subject to these scorns and these terrors still; but Christianus idiota persuasissimum habet<sup>30</sup>, the unlearnedest Christian that is (be he a true Christian), hath learning enough to establish himself so, that neither scorns nor terrors can shake his foundations. So then you see what fellowship of the faithful, what household of the righteous, what communion of saints it is, that falls under this denomination, we, we that have laid our foundations in faith and made our superedifications in sanctimony and holiness of life; we that have learned, and learned by the right rule, the rule of Christianity, how to put a right value upon this world, and those things which can but concern our body in this world; for multis serviet qui corpori servit, says the oracle of moral men<sup>31</sup>. That man is a common slave to everybody, that is a slave to his own body ; that man dares displease no man, that dares not displease himself ; that man will grovel, and prostrate, and prostitute himself at every great man's threshold, that is afraid to lose a dish from his table, or a pillow from his bed, at home. Multis serviet, qui corpori servit, et qui, pro illo, nimium timet, He is the true coward that is afraid of every inconvenience which another may cast upon his person or fortune. Honestum ei vile est, cui corpus nimis charum est, He that hath set too high a price upon his body will sell his soul cheap. But if we can say of the fires of tribulation as Origen says (whether he speak of the fires of conflagration at the last day, or these fires of purification in our way to it), Indigemus sacramento ignis, baptismo ignis, that all our fiery tribulations fall under the nature and definition of sacraments, that they are so many visible signs of invisible grace, that every correction from God's hand is a rebaptization to me, and that I can see that I should not have been so sure of salvation without this sacrament, without this baptism, without this fire of tribulation. If I can bring this fire to that temper

<sup>24</sup> Mal. ii. 15.<sup>25</sup> 2 Pet. i. 4.<sup>26</sup> Rom. viii. 17.<sup>27</sup> Psalm cv. 15.<sup>28</sup> Rom. viii. 38.<sup>29</sup> 1 Cor. xiv. 38.<sup>30</sup> Origen.<sup>31</sup> Seneca.

the midst of the fire, and yet safe from the fire; so, though St. Jerome say (and upon good grounds), audacis audaciæ est, puræque conscientiæ, It is an act of greater boldness than any man, as man, can show, and a testimony of a clearer conscience than any man, as man, can pretend to have, regnum Dei postulare, et judicium non timere, to press God for the day of judgment, and not to fear that day (for upon men, considered but as men, falls that severe exaltation of the prophet Amos, Woe unto you that hire the day of the Lord; to what end is it for you? The day of the Lord is darkness, and not light)<sup>32</sup>; yet I shall find that such a family, such a society, such a communion there is, and that I am of that quorum that can say, Come what scorns can come, and what terrors can come, in Christo omnia possumus, though we can do nothing of ourselves, yet as we are in Christ we can do all things, because we are united in him, secundum promissa; which is our fourth and next branch, According to his promises.

I have nothing to plead with God but only his own promises. I cannot plead birthright; the Jews were our brothers, and yet were disinherited. I cannot plead descent; my mother was an Hittite<sup>33</sup> (as the prophet Ezekiel speaks), I am but of the half blood at best, more of the first than of the second Adam, more temporal than spiritual. I cannot plead purchase; if I have given any thing for God's sake, if I have done any thing, suffered any thing for God's sake, all that is far from merit, as that it is not the interest of my principal debt. Nay, I cannot plead mercy, for I am nature the child of wrath too<sup>34</sup>. All my plea is, that to which he carries me so often in his word, Quia fidelis Dominus, Because the Lord is a faithful God. This apostle calls him fidelem Creatorem, a faithful with my spirit that he did so. And in the

<sup>32</sup> Amos, v. 18.<sup>33</sup> Ezek. xvi. 3.<sup>34</sup> Eph. ii. 3.

xix. 11, his very denomination, his very Faithful : for this faithfulness in God, which recommended to me, must necessarily im-promise. If God be faithful, he is faithful contract, to some promise that he hath that promise is my evidence. But then to that is pretended, and not deduced from his he may justly plead non est factum, he may promise. For, as in cases of diffidence and his mercy, God puts us upon that issue, U
Produce your evidence ; why are you jealous
Where is the bill of your mother's divorce
have put away, or which of my creditors whom I have sold you<sup>30</sup> ? So in cases of in ourselves, or pressing God with his promise so also in cases of innovation of matter of his church), God puts us to the same libellus, Produce your evidence ; where in may have I made any such contract, any such any such promise to you ? My witness is i romise, his contract, his covenant, and else not. It is a general and a useful observation made by Augustine, Omnium hæreticorum quasi regularis ista temeritas, This is a regular irregularity, this is constant and constant levity amongst all heretics, autatem stabilissimam fundatissimæ ecclesiæ quasi nis nomine et pollicitatione superare, to overthrow the foundations of the church upon the appearance and pretence, and colour of reason; God cannot proceed thus or thus, because there is this and reason against it. Now the foundations of the church are the Scriptures; and when men present reasons of probability, of verisimilitude, of pious creeds, not deduced out of the Scriptures, they fall into that regular irregularity, and into that constant irregularity, which St. Augustine justly makes the character and specification of a heretic, to seem to proceed upon reasons, and not deduce those reasons from the Scriptures. When therefore they reason thus (as Bellarmine does), Non discretus Dominus, that God had dealt discreetly, if he had not established a church, certain, a visible, and infallible church, a church wedded with these and these, with those and those, such and such, and more and more immunities and privileges, by which that particular church must appear catholic and super-universal above all the churches in the world, we join not with them in that; we do not call God's discretion in question, but we join with them in that issue, Ubi libellus, Where is your promise, which is your Scripture, which you will rely upon for that, for such a church? For we content ourselves with such places of Scripture as may serve to illustrate that doctrine to them that believe it beforehand without Scripture, but we ask such places of Scripture as may prove it to them who, till they see the Scriptures, believe, and believe truly, that they physicians of God my physicians, and see what prescribe me in the Scriptures, and look at fellow-patient Job applied that physic by his prayer.

And if any thing heavier than that which fell upon Job fall upon me, yet I may propose one to upon whom there fell more than can fall upon man; for all mankind fell upon him, and all of all mankind, and God's justice, God's anger all the sins of all mankind fell upon him, and he had a glorious eluctation, a victory, a triumph out of that. And he is not only my rule and my example, but my surety and my promise, That where he is, I shall be also<sup>40</sup>; not only where he is, in glory, but in every step that he made in this world with him in his afflictions, I shall be with him in his eluctation, in his victory, in his triumph. So I must, I must, falling upon such a meditation as this, not depart from it; he insists upon it thus: Ille à dextris Dei sedet, conforme fiet hoc Will God make this body of mine like that now at his right hand? Yes, he will. Ille adorant angeli? Like him, whom all the angels worship? Yes, like him. Illi, cui adstan

much: Cum illo, I shall be with him before, with him wheresoever he was in this world. I shall be with him in his agonies and sadness of soul; but in those agonies and sadnesses, I shall be with him still, in his veruntamen, in his surrender of himself, Not my will, but thine, O Father, be done. I shall be with him upon his cross, but in all my crosses, and in all my jealousies and suspicions of that dereliquisti, that God, my God hath forsaken me, I shall be with him still, in his in manus, in a confidence and assurance that I may commit my spirit into his hands. For all this I do according to his promise, that where he is I shall be also. Si totus mundus lachrymis sumptis deflesset (says the same father), If men were made of tears, as they are made of the elements of tears, of the occasions of tears, of miseries, and if all men were resolved to tears, as they must resolve to dust, all were not enough to lament their miserable condition, who lay hold upon the miserable comforters of this world upon their own merits, or upon the supererogations of other men, of which there are no promises, and cannot find that true promise which is implied in those examples of Job and Christ, applicable to themselves. Nevertheless we, we that can do so, we that can read that promise, that where they are we shall be, that what he hath done for them he will also do for us, we, according to his promise, declared in his Scriptures, in the midst of scoffers and in the midst of terrors, expect and look for more than we have yet; which is another and our fifth consideration.

As God hath provided us an endlessness in the world to come, so to give us an inchoation, a representation of the next world in this, God hath instituted an endlessness in this world too; God hath imprinted in every natural man, and doth exalt in the supernatural and regenerate man, an endless and undeter-

It is plain, it is evident, that that name which hath taken in Exodus<sup>41</sup> signifies essence, being. nomen Dei, Semper esse<sup>42</sup>, God's proper name is being. That can be said of no creature that it was, that which the Arians said blasphemy Christ, Erat, quando non erat, is true of all creatures. There was a time when that thing was nothing of God more than this may be said; so much that when we have said all that we can, more much more remains unsaid: for Totum Deus uno nomine, exprimit, sicut nec totum aerem. A man may as well draw in all the air at one breath as express all God, God entirely, in one name the name that reaches farthest towards him the name which he hath taken in Exodus. Deo jungimur sumus<sup>44</sup>, In being derived from God a being, we are something; In him we live as and have our being: but Deo si comparemur sumus, If we be compared with God, our being his being, we have no being at all, we are nothing for being is the peculiar and proper name of God. But though it be so clear that that name of Exodus is being, yet it is not so clear whether at, Sum qui sum, I am that I am, and, Go and tell Pharaoh, that he whose name is I am, hath sent thee. yet in the original it is plain, and plain in the dean paraphrase, that that name is delivered in future, Ero qui ero, I shall be that I shall be, Go and tell Pharaoh, that he whose name is I shall be, hath sent thee. God calls upon man, even the consideration of the name of God, to consider future state: for if we consider God in the present, ay, now, God hath had as long a forenoon as he hath an afternoon; God hath been God as many thousands of millions of generations already, as he shall be hereafter; but if we consider man in the present, ay, now, how short a forenoon hath any man had; nay, if eighty years, yet few and evil have his days. Nay, if we take man collectively, entirely, together, all mankind, how short a forenoon hath man had! It is not yet six thousand years since man had his first being. But if we consider him in the after-noon, in his future state, in his life after death, every minute of his six thousand years were multiplied by so many millions of ages, all would amount to nothing, merely nothing, in respect of that eternity which he is to dwell in. We can express man's forenoon, his future perpetuity, his everlastingness, in one way, but it is a fair way, a noble way, this: how late a beginning soever God gave man, man shall no more see an end, no more die, than God himself that gave him life. Therefore says the apostle, We, who consider God according to his promise, do not look for future things, but look for more at God's hand after than we have received heretofore; for his mercies are new every morning, and his later mercies are his largest mercies. How many, how great numbers perish, without ever hearing the name of Christ; but God wrapped me up in his covenant, and seal of that sacrament. And then, how many are baptized, and so eased in original sin, do proceed to actual sins, and are surprised by death; they receive the seal of their reconciliation to God in the sacrament of his body and his blood; I have hath afforded me the seal of that sacrament too. My sins soever God forgave me this morning, yea the best (and I am none of them) fall seven days, God forgives me seven more sins to-morrow he did to-day, and seven in this arithmetic is God's temporal, God's spiritual blessings, exhaustible. What have we that we have received? But what have we received in return for that which is laid up for us? and therefore et mus, we determine ourselves in God so, as to look for nothing but from him; but not so as to hope for no more from him than we have had, were to determine God, to circumscribe God, to make God finite: therefore we bless God for our present possession but yet we expect a larger reversion. And what is intended in this text shall make that reversion manifest, which is the day of judgment.

Therefore in the verse immediately before

imply and testify a love to it, a desire of it, a longing for it. When these things begin to come to pass (says Christ, speaking of the signs preceding the last day), then look up and lift your heads, for your redemption draweth near<sup>45</sup>. All our dejections of spirit should receive an exaltation in that one consolation, that that day draweth near. Seu velimus, seu nolumus<sup>46</sup>, whether we will or no, that day will come: but, says that father in that short prayer of his, the Lord hath given thee an entire petition for accelerating and hasting that day of the Lord. When he bids thee say, Thy kingdom come, he means that thou shouldst mean the kingdom of glory at the judgment, as well as the kingdom of grace in the church. Christ says, If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am you may be also<sup>47</sup>. Now, beloved, hath Christ done one half of this for us, and would not we have him do the other half too? Is he gone to prepare the place, and would we not have him come to fetch us to it? Certainly Christ speaks that in favour, he intends it for a favour, when he says, Behold I come quickly<sup>48</sup>. It is one favour that he will come, and seconded with another, that he will make speed to save us, that he will make haste to help us. And, to establish us in that assurance, he adds in that place, Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me; if the coming do not, if the speed do not, yet let the reward work in you a desire of that day. The last words that Christ speaks in the Bible (and amongst us last words make deepest impressions) are, Surely I come quickly<sup>49</sup>; and the last answer that is made in our behalfs, there is, Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus. There is scarce any amongst us but does expect this coming; they that fear it expect it, but that crown that the apostle speaks of is laid up for them that love the appearing of the Lord<sup>50</sup>; not only expect it but love it; and no man can do so that hath not a confidence in his cause. Adventum judicis non diligit<sup>51</sup>, No prisoner longs for the sessions, no client longs for the day of hearing, nisi qui in causa sua se sciat habere justitiæ meritum, except he know his cause to be good, and assure himself that he shall stand upright in judgment. But can we have that assurance? Assuredly we may. He that hath seen the marks of election in both editions, in the Scripture first, and then in his conscience; he that does not flatter and abuse his own soul, nor tempt and presume upon God; he that in a sober and rectified conscience finds himself truly incorporated in Christ, truly interested in his merits, may be sure, that if the day of judgment came now, now he should be able to stand upright in judgment. And therefore let schoolboys look after holidays, and worldly men after rent days, and travellers after fair days, and chapmen after market days: nevertheless we, we that have laid hold in heaven cry unto God there, Usque quo, Domine, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood<sup>52</sup>? That which those martyrs solicit there is the day of judgment; and though that which they ask was not presently granted, but the day of judgment put off for a time, yet God was not displeased with their solicitation; for, for all that, he gave them then their white robes, testimony enough of their innocence. If we could wish our own death as innocently, as harmlessly, as they did the day of judgment; if no ill circumstances in us did vitiate our desire of death; if there were no dead flies in this ointment<sup>53</sup> (as Solomon speaks); if we had not, at least, a collateral respect (if not a direct and principal) to our own ease, from the incumbrances, and grievances, and annoyances of this world, certainly we might safely desire, piously wish, religiously pray, for our own death. But it is hard, very hard, to divest those circumstances that infect it; for if I pretend to desire death merely for the fruition of the glory of the sight of God, I must remember that my Saviour desired that glory, and yet stayed his time for it. If I pretend to desire death, that I might see no more sin, hear no more blasphemies from others, it may be I may do more good to others, than I shall take harm by others, if I live. If I would die that I might be at an end of temptations in myself, yet I might lose some of that glory which I shall have in heaven, by resisting another year's temptation, if I died now. To end this consideration, as this looking for the day of the Lord (which is the word of our text) implies a joy and a gladness of it when it shall come (whether we consider that as the day itself, the day of judgment, or the eve of the day, the day of our death), so doth this looking for it imply a patient attending of do so, for we shall not wait long. This is the last says St. John, speaking of the present time gospel; in the time of nature they were a great way off from the resurrection, for then the time of was to come in: and in the time of the law they were a great way off, for then the time of the gospel came in. But this is the last time; there shall be more changes after the gospel; the present time the gospel shall land us upon the judgment (as the Vulgate reads that place), Novissima hora if God will have us stay a little longer, it is but a few minutes, for this is our last hour. Yet we scorn, we apprehend terrors, nevertheless rooted in his promises, do expect, we are not at a distance from our desires, and with a holy impatience would give us, and yet with a holy patience till he pleased to give us, new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness; which are branches which remain yet to be considered.

<sup>45</sup> Luke, xxi. 28.<sup>46</sup> Augustine.<sup>47</sup> John, xiv. 3.<sup>48</sup> Rev. xxii. 12.<sup>49</sup> Rev. xxii. 20.

<sup>52</sup> Rev. vi. 10.<sup>53</sup> Eccles. x. 1.

As, in the first discoveries of the unknown world, the maps and cards which were thereof were very uncertain, very imperfect, so in the discovery of these new heavens, the expositors of those who have undertaken that work are very heavens and that earth, which our antipodes (and generally those that inhabit the other hemisphere) inhabit, to be the new heavens and the new earth of this text. He says, Oceanus intransibilis ad reliquos mundos, There are worlds beyond these worlds, beyond that ocean, which we cannot pass nor discover, says Origen; but those worlds, and those heavens, and that earth, shall be discovered before the last day, and the gospel of Christ be preached in all those places. And this is our expectation, that which we look for, according to his promises, in the intention and exposition of Origen. Those that were infected with the heresy of the Chiliasts, or Millenarians (with which heresy divers great and learned men, whom we refuse not to call fathers in the primitive church, were infected), upon the mistaking of those words in the Apocalypse, of reigning with Christ a thousand years<sup>57</sup> after the first resurrection, argued and concluded a happy temporal state of God's saints here upon this earth, for so many years after that day. So that, though there should not be truly a new earth and new heavens, but the same heavens and the same earth as was before for those future thousand years, yet, because those saints of God, which in their whole former life had been in misery upon this earth, should now enjoy all earthly happiness upon the same earth for a thousand years, before they ascended into heaven, these heavens and this earth (because they are so to them) are called a new earth and a new heavens by those Millenarians. St. Jerome and St. Augustine, and after them the whole stream, run in another channel. They say, that these heavens and this earth shall be so purified, so refined, by the last fires of conflagration, as that all corruptible qualities shall be burnt out of them, but they, in their substance, remain still. To that those words of St. Paul incline them, Perit figura, The fashion of this passeth away<sup>38</sup>, the fashion, not the substance is Melioratio, non interitus, The world shall be better, but it shall not be made nothing. But shall it be thus improved? In that, St. Augustine declares himself, Mundus in melius immutatus apte accommodabitur hominibus in melius habitatus. When men are made better by the reformation, this world, being made better by those fire, shall be a fit habitation for those saints of God; even this world, and whatsoever is not hell, shall be heaven. And, truly, some very good divines of the Reformation<sup>39</sup> accompany those ancients in this position, that these heavens, purified with those fires, and superinvested with new endowments, shall be the everlasting habitation of the blessed saints of God. But still, in these discoveries of these new heavens, and this new earth, our maps will be improved. But as it is said of old cosmographers, that when they had said all that they knew of a country, and much more was to be said, they said that the

<sup>57</sup> Rev. xx. 4.

is he himself, the Son of God, the Sun of glory. A new earth, where all their waters are milk, and all their milk honey; where all their grass is corn, and all their corn manna; where all their glebe, all their clods of earth, are gold, and all their gold of innumerable carats; where all their minutes are ages, and all their ages eternity; where every thing is every minute in the highest exaltation, as good as it can be, and yet superexalted and infinitely multiplied by every minute's addition; every minute infinitely better than ever it was before. Of these new heavens and this new earth we must say at last, that we can say nothing; for the eye of man hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor heart conceived, the state of this place. We limit and determine our consideration with that horizon with which the Holy Ghost hath limited us, that it is that new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Here then the Holy Ghost intends the same new heavens and new earth, which he does in the Apocalypse<sup>60</sup>, and describes there, by another name, the new Jerusalem. But here the Holy Ghost does not proceed, as there, to enamour us of the place by a promise of improvement of those things which we have and love here, but by a promise of that which here we have not at all. There, and elsewhere, the Holy Ghost applies himself to the natural affections of men. To those that are affected with riches he says, that that new city shall be all of gold, and in the foundations all manner of precious stones<sup>61</sup>; to those that are affected with beauty he promises an everlasting association with that beautiful couple, that fair pair, which spend their time in that contemplation and that protestation, Ecce tu pulchra, dilecta mea; Ecce tu pulcher, Behold thou art fair, my beloved<sup>62</sup>, says he; honour, triumph after their victory in the church; and to those that are carried with ous and magnific feasts, a marriage supper Lamb, where not only all the rarities of the world, but the whole world itself, shall be served at that table. But here the Holy Ghost ceeds not that way, by improvement of things we have and love here; riches, or beauty, or honour, or feasts; but by an everlasting possession that which we hunger, and thirst, and pant after, and cannot compass, that is, justice, or righteousness for both those our present word denotes, and those we want here, and shall have both for these new heavens and new earth.

<sup>60</sup> Rev. xxi. 1.<sup>61</sup> Rev. xxi. 18.<sup>62</sup> Cant. i. 15—17.

What would a worn and macerated suitor, oppressed by the bribery of the church, or by the mighty potent adversary, give, or do, or suffer, that he have justice? What would a dejected spirit, a solate soul, oppressed with the weight of his habitual sin, that stands naked in a frosty winter desperation, and cannot compass one fig leaf of colour, one excuse for any circumstance of justice, upon the woman's importunity<sup>63</sup>. Justice is no justice that is done for fear of an appeal or a commission. There may be found, that may do justice at first: at their first entrance into a place to make good impressions, to establish good opinions, they may do some acts of justice; but, after, either an uxoriousness towards the wife, or a solicitude for children, or a facility towards servants, or a vastness of expense, quenches and overcomes the love of justice in them: non habitat, in most it is not, but it dwells not in any. In our new heavens and new earth dwelleth justice: and that's my comfort, that when I come thither I shall have justice at God's hands. It was an act of mercy merely, that God decreed a means of salvation, but to give salvation to them for whom Christ gave that full satisfaction, is but an act of justice. It is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you who are troubled, rest with us<sup>64</sup>, says the apostle. It is an act of the same justice to save the true believer, as to damn him who by unbelief hath made himself a reprobate.

Justice dwells there, and there dwells righteousness, of which there is none in this world, none that grows in this world, none that is mine own; for, howsoever we do dispute, or will conclude of inherent righteousness, it is indeed rather adherent than inherent, rather extrinsical than intrinsical. Not that it is not in myself, in my will, but it is not of myself nor of my will; my will was never able to rectify, to justify itself; but the power of God's grace calls in a foreign righteousness to my succour, the righteousness of my Saviour, and calls his, and makes his, my righteousness. But yet, non habitat, this righteousness dwells not unremovable in me here. Though I have put on cence ; a present impeccancy, and an impeccancy for the future. But in this especially is righteousness said to dwell there, because this righteous one is the very Son of God, the Son of Righteousness himself, and this day, the day of his second coming, the day of his progress ; for ever after that day the heavens and new earth shall be his standing place where he shall dwell, and we with him ; as he has said, The righteous shall shine forth as the sun<sup>65</sup>, as the Son of God himself, as the Son of Glory, as the Son of Righteousness himself shall impart to us all a mysterious gavelkin of glorious equality of fulness of glory to us ; he shall not whisper to his own Son, a Sede Sit thou at my right hand ; nor a Hodie This day have I begotten thee ; nor a Ponam tuos, I will make thine enemies thy footstools more ; but, as it is said of the armies of Israel, they went forth as one man, so the whole of God's saints, incorporated in Christ Jesus, shall ratification of my first election; and to us all, Ponam inimicos vestros, I will make all your enemies your footstool; for God shall establish us there, ubi non intrat inimicus, nec amicus exit<sup>66</sup>, where no man shall come in that troubles the company, nor any whom any of the company loves go out; but we shall not only have, but be a part of that righteousness which dwells in these new heavens and new earth, which we, according to his promise, look for.

<sup>63</sup> Luke, xviii. 2.

<sup>64</sup> 2 Thes. i. 6.

And be this the end of our first text, as it is a text for instruction. Pass we now to our second, our text for commemoration. Close we here this book of life, from which we have had our first text, and Surge quæ dormis in pulvere, Arise thou book of death, thou that sleepest in this consecrated dust, and hast been going into dust now almost a month of days, almost a lunar year, and dost deserve such anniversaries, such quick returns of periods, and a commemoration in every such year, in every month; arise thou and be another commentary to us, and tell us what this new heaven and new earth is, in which now thou dwellest with that righteousness. But we do not invoke thee, as thou art a saint in heaven; appear to us as thou didst appear to us a month ago; at least appear in thy history, appear in our memory, that when every one of us have looked upon thee by his own glass, and seen thee in his own interest, such as thou wast to him, that when one shall have seen thee the best wife, and a larger number the best mother, and more than they, a whole town, the best neighbour, and more than a town, a large body of noble friends, the best friend, and more than all they, all the world, the best example, when thou hast received this testimony from the militant church, as thou hast the recompense of all this in thy blessed soul, in the tri-

<sup>66</sup> Augustine.

antly performed ; that there should be scorn in divine things, and matters appertaining to his religion : for now, in these our days, ex wit lies in profaneness ; he is the good spirit abuse God, and he good company that company the worse, or keeps them from This being the air and the complexion of her times, and her inclination and convers rally cheerful and merry, and loving fa and sharpness of wit, nevertheless who ever who ever heard her, countenance a profane s sharp soever, or take part with wit to the p godliness ? From this I testify her holy cl and religious alacrity (one of the best evid good conscience), that as she came to God's house of prayer, duly, not only ever when it is the house of other exercises as prayer, but even in those week days when a house of prayer, as often as these doors w
for a holy convocation ; and as she ever ha family and her company hither with the ch more a cheerful giver of himself. Truly he that close his eyes in a holy cheerfulness every night, shall meet no distempered, no inordinate, no irregularness then, when God, by the hand of death, shall see his eyes at last.

But, return we again to our Nevertheless. You y remember, that this word in our former part put first upon the consideration of scoffers at the day of gment, and then upon the consideration of terrors l sad apprehensions at that day. And for her, ne sicknesses, in the declination of her years, had ened her to an overflowing of melancholy; not that : ever lay under that water, but yet had sometimes ne high tides of it; and though this distemper uld sometimes cast a cloud, and some half damps on her natural cheerfulness and sociableness, and netimes induce dark and sad apprehensions, never-less who ever heard or saw in her any such effect melancholy as to murmur or repine, or dispute upon y of God's proceedings, or to lodge a jealousy or picpion of his mercy and goodness towards her and hers? The wit of our time is profaneness; never-less, she that loved that hated this. Occasional melancholy had taken some hold in her, nevertheless it never eclipsed, never interrupted, her cheerful fidence and assurance in God.

Our second word denotes the person; we, nevertheless we; and here in this consideration, nevertheless :. This may seem to promise some picture, some aracter, of her person; but she was no stranger to em that hear me now, nor scarce to any that may ar of this hereafter which you hear now, and there-e much needs not to that purpose. Yet, to that rpose, of her person, and personal circumstances, as much I may remember some and inform others, at from that worthy family whence she had her and Job's distribution (as she herself would remember), seven sons and three daughters; on this ground she grew not many years more than necessary for the producing of so many plan being then left to choose her own ground; widowhood, having at home established and the estate, with a fair and noble addition, provided herself, as her principal care, the education of her children. To advance that she came with them to dwell with them in the university, and received to them the loss of a father, in giving them mothers, her own personal care, and the advantage of that place; where she contracted a friendship with divers reverend persons of eminency and excellence there, which continued to their ends. And now was her greatest business, so she made this a large period, for in this state of widowhood she continued twelve years: and then, returning to marriage, that second marriage turns us to the consideration of another personal circumstance, the natural endowments of her person, which ch, as that though her virtues were his principal object, yet even these, her personal and natural dowments, had their part in drawing and fixing the affections of such a person<sup>66</sup>, as by his birth, and youth, and interest in great favours in court, and legal proximity to great possessions in the world, might justly have promised him acceptance in what family soever, upon what person soever, he had directed and fixed his affections. He placed them here, neither reverted then nor repented since; for as the well tuning of an instrument makes higher and lower strings of one sound, so the inequality of their years is thus reduced to an evenness, that she had a cheerfulness agreeable to his youth, and he a sober wisdom conformable to her more years. So that I would not consider her at so much more than forty, or him at so much less than thirty, at that time; but their persons were made one, and their fortunes made one, by marriage, so I would put their years to one number, and, finding a sixty between them, link them thirty apiece, for as twins of one hour day lived. God, who joined them then, having also separated them now, may make their years even this other way too, by giving him as many years after her going out of this world, as he had given her before his coming into it; and then as many more as God may receive glory, and the world benefit, by that addition; at so, as at their first meeting she was, at their second meeting he may be, the elder person.

To this consideration of her person then belongs this, that God gave her such a comeliness as, though she were not proud of it, yet she was so content with it as not to go about to mend it by any art. And for her attire (which is another personal circumstance), was never sumptuous, never sordid, but always

<sup>66</sup> Sir John Danvers, only brother to the Earl of Danby.

And, as to the consideration of the house, the consideration of the furniture too, so in these personal circumstances we consider her fortune and estate, which was in a fair and noble proportion derived from her first husband, and fairly administered by herself, with the allowance of her husband in which she was one of God's true stewards and almoners too. There are dispositions which he gives presents than pay debts, and rather do to strangers than to those that are nearer to them. She always thought the care of her family and upon that for the provision, for the order, for the portions, in a good largeness, she placed her thoughts of that kind: for, for our families God's stewards; for those without, we are his servants. In which office she gave not at some great some solemn goings abroad, but as God's trustees, the sun and moon, that pass on in a constant doing of good, as she received her daily bread from God, so daily she distributed and imparted it to prepared for her own table. And as her house was a court in the conversation of the best, and an alms-house in feeding the poor, so was it also an hospital in ministering relief to the sick. And truly the love of doing good in this kind, of ministering to the sick, was the honey that was spread over all her bread ; the air, the perfume, that breathed over all her house ; the disposition that dwelt in those her children, and those her kindred, which dwelt with her, so bending this way, that the studies and knowledge of one, the hand of another, and purse of all, and a joint facility and openness, and accessibleness to persons of the meanest quality, concurred in this blessed act of charity, to minister relief to the sick : of which myself, who at that time had the favour to be admitted into that family, can and must testify this, that when the late heavy visitation fell hotly upon this town, when every door was shut up, and, lest death should enter into the house, every house was made a sepulchre of them that were in it ; then, then, in that time of infection, divers persons visited with that infection had their relief, and relief applicable to that very infection, from this house.

Now when I have said thus much (rather thus little) of her person, as of a house, that the ground upon which it was built was the family where she was born, and then where she was married, and then the time of her widowhood, and lastly her last marriage ; and that the house itself was those fair bodily endowments which God had bestowed upon her, and the furniture of that house, the fortune, and the use of that fortune, of which God had made her steward and almoner : when I shall also have said, that the inhabitants of this house (rather the servants, for they did but wait upon religion in her) were those married couples of moral virtues, conversation married with a do her all right, and all you that good, if I say all. But I haste to an end, in consider some things that appertain more expressly than these personal, or civil, or moral things.

In those the next is, the secundum primum. That she governed herself according to his promises laid down in his Scriptures. For rule of all her civil actions was religion, so that her religion was the Scripture; and her rule particular understanding of the Scripture church. She never diverted towards the undervaluing the Scripture, nor towards the sin in undervaluing the church: but in the discipline of that church in which God sealeth himself in baptism, she brought up her child; assisted her family, she dedicated her soul to her life, and surrendered it to him in her death in that form of common prayer which is ordained that church, and to which she had accustomed with her family twice every day, she joined company which was about her death had in a

God's music, a christianly death : for death in the Old Testament was a commination, but in the New Testament death is a promise : when there was a super-dying, a death upon the death, a morte upon the morieris, a spiritual death after the bodily, then we died according to God's threatening ; now, when by the Gospel that second death is taken off, though we die still, yet we die according to his promise. That is a part of his mercy and his promise which his apostle gives us from him, that we shall all be changed<sup>70</sup> ; for after that promise, that change, follows that triumphant acclamation, O death, where is thy sting ? O grave, where is thy victory<sup>71</sup> ? Consider us fallen in Adam, and we are miserable that we must die ; but consider us restored and reintegrated in Christ, we were more miserable if we might not die : we lost the earthly paradise by death then, but we get not heaven but by death now. This she expected till it came, and embraced it when it came. How may we think she was joyed to see that face that angels delight to look upon, the face of her Saviour, that did not abhor the face of his fearfulest messenger, death ! She showed no fear of his face in any change of her own, but died without any change of countenance or posture, without any struggling, any disorder ; but her death-bed was as quiet as her grave. To another Magdalen Christ said upon earth, Touch me not, for I am not ascended. Being ascended now to his glory, and she being gone up to him, after she had awaited his leisure so many years as that more would soon have grown to be vexation and sorrow ; as her last words here were, I submit my will to the will of God, so we doubt not but the first word which she heard there was that Euge from her body in the resurrection : in which expects returns to her former charity ; she will not till all we shall have it as well as she ; she ea morsels alone in her life<sup>72</sup> (as Job speaks), s not for the glory of the resurrection alone ;

<sup>70</sup> 1 Cor. xv. 51.<sup>71</sup> 1 Cor. xv. 55.

death. But when all we shall have been me the earth many years, or changed in the ai twinkling of an eye (God knows which), t
upon which you tread now, that body wh
whilst I speak, is mouldering and crumbling and less dust, and so hath some motion, th
life ; that body which was the tabernacle o soul, and a temple of the Holy Ghost ; that was eyes to the blind, and hands and feet to whilst it lived, and being dead is so still, b
been so lively an example to teach others t that body at last shall have her last expectati fied, and dwell bodily with that righteousness
new heavens and new earth, for ever, and e ever, and infinite and super-infinite evers.

spouse of Christ: and this good soul, being thus laid down to sleep in his peace, his left hand under her head, gathering, and composing, and preserving her dust, for future glory, his right hand embracing her, assuming and establishing her soul in present glory, in his name, and in her behalf, I say that to all you, which Christ says there in the behalf of that spouse, Adjuro vos, I adjure you, I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, that ye wake her not till she please<sup>74</sup>. The words are directed to the daughters rather than to the sons of Jerusalem, because, for the most part, the aspersions that women receive, either in moral or religious actions, proceed from women themselves. Therefore, Adjuro vos, I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, wake her not. Wake her not with any half calumnies, with any whisperings; but if you will wake her, wake her, and keep her awake, with an active imitation of her moral and her holy virtues; that so her example working upon you, and the number of God's saints being the sooner by this blessed example fulfilled, we may all meet, and meet quickly, in that kingdom which hers and our

Saviour hath purchased for us all with the inestimable price of his incorruptible blood. To which glorious Son of God,
 &c.

<sup>74</sup> Cant. viii. 4.

DEATH'S DUEL,
OR, A CONSOLATION TO THE SOUL AGAINST
THE DYING LIFE AND LIVING DEATH
OF THE BODY.

DELIVERED IN A SERMON AT WHITEHALL, BEFORE
THE KING'S MAJESTY, IN THE BEGINNING
OF LENT, 1630.

BY THAT LATE LEARNED AND REVEREND DIVINE,
JOHN DONNE, DR. IN DIVINITY, AND DEAN
OF ST. PAUL'S, LONDON.

BEING HIS LAST SERMON, AND CALLED BY HIS MAJESTY'S HOUSE- HOLD, THE DOCTOR'S OWN FUNERAL SERMON.

TO THE READER.

THIS sermon was, by sacred authority, styled the author's own funeral sermon, most fitly, whether we respect the time or matter. It was preached not many days before his death, as if, having done this, there remained nothing for him to do but to die: and the matter is of death—the occasion and subject of all funeral sermons. It hath been observed of this reverend man, that his faculty in preaching continually increased, and that, as he exceeded others at first, so at last he exceeded himself. This is his last sermon; I will not say it is therefore his best, because all his were excellent. Yet thus much: a dying man's words, if they concern ourselves, do usually make the deepest impression, as being spoken most feelingly, and with least affectation. Now, whom doth it concern to learn both the danger and benefit of death? Death is every man's enemy, and intends hurt to all, though to many he be occasion of greatest goods. This enemy we must all combat dying, whom he living did

DEATH'S DUEL.

PSALM LXVIII. 20, in fine.

And unto God the Lord belong the issues of death, i. e. from death.

BUILDINGS stand by the benefit of their foundations that sustain and support them, and of their buttresses that comprehend and embrace them, and of their contignations that knit and unite them. The foundations suffer them not to sink, the buttresses suffer them not to swerve, and the contignation and sitting suffers them not to cleave. The body of our building is in the former part of this verse. It is this: He that is our God is the God of salvation and deliverance; of salvation in the plural, so it is in the singular; the God that gives us spiritual and temporal salvation too. But of this building, the foundation, the buttresses, the contignations, are in this part of the verse which constitutes our text, and in the three diverse acceptations of the words amongst our expositors. Unto God the Lord belong the issues from death, for, first, the foundation of this building (that our God is the God of all salvation) is laid in this, that unto this God the Lord belong the issues of death; that is, it is his power to give us an issue and deliverance, even when we are brought to the jaws and teeth of death, and to the lips of that whirlpool the grave. And in this acceptation, this exitus mortis, this issue of

of our death ; what kind of issue and transi we shall have out of this world, whether pre sudden, whether violent or natural, whethe perfect senses or shaken and disordered by there is no condemnation to be argued out of judgment to be made upon that, for, howso die, precious in his sight is the death of h and with him are the issues of death ; the wa departing out of this life are in his hands. /
this sense of the words, this exitus mortis, t
of death, is liberatio in morte, a deliverance not that God will deliver us from dying, he will have a care of us in the hour of death kind soever our passage be. And in this s acceptation of the words, the natural frame texture doth well and pregnantly administer
And then, lastly, the contignation and knitti building, that he that is our God is the God of tions, consists in this, Unto this God the Lo
the issues of death ; that is, that this God

acceptation of the words, and those many and great persons that have adhered to him. In all these three lines, then, we shall look upon these words, first, as the God of power, the Almighty Father rescues his servants from the jaws of death; and then as the God of mercy, the glorious Son rescued us by taking upon himself this issue of death; and then, between these two, as the God of comfort, the Holy Ghost rescues us from all discomfort by his blessed impressions beforehand, that what manner of death soever be ordained for us, yet this exitus mortis shall be introitus in vitam, our issue in death shall be an entrance into everlasting life. And these three considerations: our deliverance à morte, in morte, per mortem, from death, in death, and by death, will abundantly do all the offices of the foundations, of the buttresses, of the contignation, of this our building; that he that is our God is the God of all salvation, because unto this God the Lord belong the issues of death.

First, then, we consider this exitus mortis to be liberatio à morte, that with God the Lord are the issues of death; and therefore in all our death, and deadly calamities of this life, we may justly hope of a good issue from him. In all our periods and transitions in this life, are so many passages from death to death; our very birth and entrance into this life is exitus à morte, an issue from death, for in our mother's womb we are dead, so as that we do not know we live, not so much as we do in our sleep, neither is there any grave so close or so putrid a prison, as the womb would be unto us if we stayed in it beyond our time, or died there before our time. In the grave the worms do not kill us; we breed, and feed, and then kill those worms which we ourselves produced. In the womb the dead child kills the mother that conceived it, and is a murderer, nay, a parricide, even after it is

be never born. . Of our very making in th David says, *I am wonderfully and fearful and such knowledge is too excellent for me<sup>2</sup>
that is the Lord's doing, and it is wonderf eyes<sup>3</sup>: ipse fecit nos, it is he that made us, we ourselves<sup>4</sup>, nor our parents neither. *T have made and fashioned me round about, e
and (as the original word is) thou hast tak about me, and yet (says he) thou dost des Though I be the masterpiece of the greate (man is so), yet if thou do no more for me leave me where thou madest me, destruc follow. The womb, which should be the hou becomes death itself if God leave us ther
which God threatens so often, the shuttin womb, is not so heavy nor so discomfortabl in the first as in the latter shutting, nor in the
of barrenness as in the shutting of weakne children are come to the birth, and no st bring forth<sup>5</sup>.

It is the exaltation of miserv to fall fro

though we cannot ourselves, our parents have to say in our behalf, Wretched man that he is, who shall deliver him from this body of death<sup>6</sup>? if there be no deliverer. It must be he that said to Jeremiah, Before I formed thee I knew thee, and before thou camest out of the womb I sanctified thee. We are not sure that there was no kind of ship nor boat to fish in, nor to pass by, till God prescribed Noah that absolute form of the ark<sup>7</sup>. That word which the Holy Ghost, by Moses, useth for the ark, is common to all kind of boats, theball, and is the same word that Moses useth for the boat that he was exposed in, that his mother laid him in an ark of bulrushes. But we are sure that Eve had no midwife when she was delivered of Cain, therefore she might well say, Possedi virum à Domino, I have gotten a man from the Lord<sup>8</sup>, wholly, entirely from the Lord; it is the Lord that enabled me to conceive, the Lord that infused a quickening soul into that conception, the Lord that brought into the world that which himself had quickened; without all this might Eve say, my body had been but the house of death, and Domini Domini sunt exitus mortis, To God the Lord belong the issues of death. But then this exitus à morte is but introitus in mortem; this issue, this deliverance from that death, the death of the womb, is an entrance, a delivering over to another death, the manifold deaths of this world; we have a windingsheet in our mother's womb which grows with us from our conception, and we come into the world wound up in that winding-sheet, for we come to seek a grave. And as prisoners discharged of actions may lie for fees, so when the womb hath discharged us, yet we are bound to it by cords of hestæ, by such a string as that we cannot go thence, nor stay there; we celebrate our own house (he hath shed no blood for Christ), y have a confessor's, he hath been ready to gl in the shedding of his blood. And if a wom possess a virgin's house (she hath embraced state of marriage), yet she may have a matro

<sup>6</sup> Rom. vii. 24.<sup>7</sup> Exod. xxiii.<sup>8</sup> Gen. iv. 1.

she hath brought forth and brought up child fear of God. In domo Patris, in my Fathe in heaven, there are many mansions<sup>9</sup>; but h earth, the Son of man hath not where t
head<sup>10</sup>, saith he himself. Nonne terram a hominum? How then hath God given this ea sons of men? He hath given them earth materials to be made of earth, and he hath g earth for their grave and sepulchre, to re resolve to earth, but not for their possessio
we have no continuing city<sup>11</sup>, nay, no cot continues, nay, no persons, no bodies, that Whatsoever moved Saint Jerome to call the of the Israelites in the wilderness<sup>12</sup>, mans word (the word is nasang) signifies but a jou
a peregrination. Even the Israel of God

perigrinamur, whilst we are in the body we are but in a pilgrimage, and we are absent from the Lord<sup>14</sup>: he might have said dead, for this whole world is but an universal churchyard, but our common grave, and the life and motion that the greatest persons have in it is but as the shaking of buried bodies in their grave, by an earthquake. That which we call life is but hebdomada mortium, a week of death, seven days, seven periods of our life spent in dying, a dying seven times over; and there is an end. Our birth dies in infancy, and our infancy dies in youth, and youth and the rest die in age, and age also dies and determines all. Nor do all these, youth out of infancy, or age out of youth, arise so, as the phoenix out of the ashes of another phoenix formerly dead, but as a wasp or a serpent out of a carrion, or as a snake out of dung. Our youth is worse than our infancy, and our age worse than our youth. Our youth is hungry and thirsty after those sins which our infancy knew not; and our age is sorry and angry, that it cannot pursue those sins which our youth did; and besides, all the way, so many deaths, that is, so many deadly calamities accompany every condition and every period of this life, as that death itself would be an ease to them that suffer them. Upon this sense doth Job wish that God had not given him an issue from the first death, from the womb, Wherefore hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had given up the ghost, and no eye seen me! I should have been as though I had not been<sup>15</sup>. And not only the impatient Israelites in their murmuring (would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt<sup>16</sup>), but Elijah himself, when he fled from Jezebel, and went for his life, as that text says, under the juniper tree, requested that he might die, <sup>14</sup> 2 Cor. v. 6.<sup>15</sup> Job, x. 18, 19.<sup>16</sup> Exod. xvi. 3.

change for death : But if my case be as Saint case, quotidiè morior, that I die daily, that thing heavier than death fall upon me every my case be David's case, tota die mortificamur
the day long we are killed, that not only day, but every hour of the day, something than death fall upon me ; though that be true
Conceptus in peccatis, I was shapen in iniqui
in sin did my mother conceive me (there I d death) ; though that be true of me, Natus fili
I was born not only the child of sin, but the wrath, of the wrath of God for sin, which is a death : yet Domini Domini sunt exitus mort
God the Lord are the issues of death ;" and Job, and a Joseph, and a Jeremiah, and a D cannot doubt of a deliverance. And if no deliverance conduce more to his glory and m yet he hath the keys of death<sup>19</sup>, and he can let at that door, that is, deliver me from the n deaths of this world, the omni die, and the the every day's death and every hour's death,

fold deaths of this world, yet it is an entrance into the death of corruption and putrefaction, and vermiculation, and incineration, and dispersion in and from the grave, in which every dead man dies over again. It was a prerogative peculiar to Christ, not to die this death, not to see corruption: what gave him this privilege? Not Joseph's great proportion of gums and spices, that might have preserved his body from corruption and incineration longer than he needed it, longer than three days, but it would not have done it for ever. What preserved him then? Did his exemption and freedom from original sin preserve him from this corruption and incineration? It is true that original sin hath induced this corruption and incineration upon us; if we had not sinned in Adam, mortality had not put on immortality<sup>20</sup> (as the apostle speaks), no, corruption had not put on incorruption, but we had had our transmigration from this to the other world without any mortality, any corruption at all. But yet since Christ took sin upon him, so far as made him mortal, he had it so far too as might have made him see this corruption and incineration, though he had no original sin in himself; what preserved him then? Did the hypostatical union of both natures, God and man, preserve him from this corruption and incineration? It is true that this was a most powerful embalming, to be embalmed with the Divine Nature itself, to be embalmed with eternity, was able to preserve him from corruption and incineration for ever. And he was embalmed, so embalmed with the Divine Nature itself, even in his body as well as in his soul; for the Godhead, the Divine Nature, did not depart, but remained still united to his dead body in the grave; but yet for all this powerful embalming, his hypostatical union of both natures, we see Christ did die; and for all his union which made him God and man, he became no man (for the union of the body and soul makes the man, and he whose soul and body are separated by death as long as that state lasts, is properly no man). And therefore as in him the dissolution of body and soul was no dissolution of the hypostatical union, so there is nothing that constrains us to say, that though the flesh of Christ had seen corruption and incineration in the grave, this had not been any dissolution of the hypostatical union, for the Divine nature, the Godhead, might have remained with all the elements and principles of Christ's body, as well as it did with the two constitutive parts of his person, his body and his soul. This incorruption then was not in Joseph's gums and spices; nor was it in Christ's innocency, and exemption from original sin, nor was it (that is, it is not necessary to say it was) in the hypostatical union. But this incorruptibleness of his flesh is most conveniently placed in that; Non dabis, thou wilt not suffer thy Holy One to see corruption; we look no further for causes or reasons in the mysteries of religion, but to the will and pleasure had manifested that decree in his prophet, therefore doth Saint Paul cite by special number the second Psalm for that decree, and therefore both Saint Peter and Saint Paul cite for it that place in the sixteenth Psalm<sup>22</sup>; for when God declares his decree and purpose in the express words of his prophet, or when he declares it in the real execution of the decree, then he makes it ours, then he manifests it to us. And therefore, as the mysteries of our religion are not the objects of our reason, but by faith we rest on God's decree and purpose—(it is so, O God, because it is thy will it should be so)—so God's decrees are ever to be considered in the manifestation thereof. All manifestation is either in the word of God, or in the execution of the decree; and when these two concur and meet it is the strongest demonstration that can be: when therefore I find those marks of adoption and spiritual filiation which are delivered in the word of God to be upon me; when I find that real execution of his good purpose upon me, as that actually I do live under the obedience and under the conditions which are evidences of adoption and spiritual filiation; then, so long as I see these marks and live so, I may safely comfort myself in a holy certitude and a modest infallibility of my adoption. Christ determines himself in that, the purpose of God was manifest to him; Saint Peter and Saint Paul determine themselves in those two ways of knowing the purpose of God, the word of God before the execution of the decree in the fulness of time. It was prophesied before, say they, and it is performed now, Christ is risen without seeing corruption. Now, this which is so singularly peculiar to him, that his flesh should not see corruption, at his second coming, his coming to judgment, shall extend to all that are then alive; their hestæ shall not see corruption, because, as the apostle says, and says as a secret, as a mystery, Behold I shew you a mystery, we shall not all sleep (that is, not continue in the state of the dead in the grave), but we shall all be changed in an instant, we shall have a dissolution, and in the same instant a redintegration, a recompacting of body and soul, and that shall be truly a death and truly a resurrection, but no sleeping in corruption; but for us that die now and sleep in the state of the dead, we must all pass this posthume death, this death after death, nay, this death after burial, this dissolution after dissolution, this death of corruption and putrefaction, of vermiculation and incineration, of dissolution and dispersion in and from the grave, when these bodies that have been the children of royal parents, and the parents of royal children, must say with Job, Corruption, thou art my father, and to the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister. Miserable riddle, when the same worm must be my mother, and my sister, and myself! Miserable incest, when I must be married to my mother and my sister, and be both father and mother to my own

<sup>20</sup> 1 Cor. xv. 33.

<sup>22</sup> Ver. 10.

them, the worm is spread under thee, and the worm covers thee. There are the mats and the carpets that lie under, and there are the state and the canopy that hang over the greatest of the sons of men. Even those bodies that were the temples of the Holy Ghost come to this dilapidation, to ruin, to rubbish, to dust; even the Israel of the Lord, and Jacob himself, hath no other specification, no other denomination, but that vermis Jacob, thou worm of Jacob. Truly the consideration of this posthume death, this death after burial, that after God (with whom are the issues of death) hath delivered me from the death of the womb, by bringing me into the world, and from the manifold deaths of the world, by laying me in the grave, I must die again in an incineration of this flesh, and in a dispersion of that dust. That that monarch, who spread over many nations alive, must in his dust lie in a corner of that sheet of lead, and there but so long as that lead will last; and that private and retired man, that thought himself his own for ever, and never came forth, must in his dust of the grave be published, and (such are the revolutions of the grave) be mingled with the dust of every highway and of every dunghill, and swallowed in every puddle and pond. This is the most, inglorious and contemptible vilification, the most deadly and peremptory nullification of man, that we can consider. God seems to have carried the declaration of his power to a great height, when he sets the prophet Ezekiel in the valley of dry bones, and says, Son of man, can these bones live? as though it had been impossible, and yet they did; the Lord laid sinews upon them, and flesh, and breath into them, and they did live. But in that case there were bones to be seen, something visible, of which it might be said, Can this thing live? But in this death of incineration and dispersion of dust, we see nothing that we call that man's. If we say, Can this dust live? Perchance it cannot; it may be the mere dust of the earth, which never did live, never shall. It may be the dust of that man's worm, which did live, but shall no more. It may be the dust of another man, that concerns not him of whom it was asked. This death of incineration and dispersion is, to natural reason, the most irrecoverable death of all; and yet Domini Domini sunt exitus mortis, unto God the Lord belong the issues of death; and by recompacting this dust into the same body, and remaining the same body with the same soul, he shall in a blessed and glorious resurrection give me such an issue from this death as shall never pass into any other death, but establish me into a life that shall last as long as the Lord of Life himself.

And so have you that that belongs to the first acceptation of these words (unto God the Lord belong the issues of death); That though from the womb to the grave, and in the grave itself, we pass from death to death, yet, as Daniel speaks, the Lord our God is able to deliver us, and he will deliver us.

fied that he went away like a lamb, that is, without any reluctance. But God knows that may be accompanied with a dangerous damp and stupefaction, and insensibility of his present state. Our blessed Saviour suffered collutations with death, and a sadness even in his soul to death, and an agony even to a bloody sweat in his body, and expostulations with God, and exclamations upon the cross. He was a devout man who said upon his death-bed, or dead turf (for he was a hermit), Septuaginta annos Domino servivisti, et mori times? Hast thou served a good master three-score and ten years, and now art thou loath to go into his presence? Yet Hilarion was loath. Bartaam was a devout man (a hermit too) that said that day he died, Cogita te hodie cœpisse servire Domino, et hodie finituum: Consider this to be the first day's service that ever thou didst thy Master, to glorify him in a christianly and a constant death, and if thy first day be thy last day too, how soon dost thou come to receive thy wages! Yet Bartaam could have been content to have stayed longer forth. Make no ill conclusions upon any man's loathness to die, for the mercies of God work momentarily in minutes, and many times insensibly to bystanders, or any other than the party departing. And then upon violent deaths inflicted as upon malefactors, Christ himself hath forbidden us by his own death to make any ill conclusion; for his own death had those impressions in it; he was reputed, he was executed as a malefactor, and no doubt many of them who concurred to his death did believe him to be so. Of sudden death there are scarce examples to be found in the Scriptures upon good men, for death in battle cannot be called sudden death; but God governs not by examples but by rules, and therefore make no ill conclusion upon sudden death nor upon distempers, neither though perchance persons overtaken with such deaths; Dominus sunt exitus mortis, to God the Lord be issues of death. And he received Samson, out of this world in such a manner (consider it passively in his own death in those whom he slew with himself) as was interpretation hard enough. Yet the Holy Spirit hath moved Saint Paul to celebrate Samson's great catalogue<sup>36</sup>, and so doth all the church. The critical day is not the very day of our death, but the whole course of our life. I thank him that calls me when the bell tolls, but I thank him more that catechises me, or preaches to me, or instructs me how to live. Fac hoc et vive, there is my motto. The mouth of the Lord hath said it, do this and thou shalt live. But though I do it, yet I shall die a bodily, a natural death. But God mentions, never seems to consider that death is a bodily, the natural death. God doth not say, and thou shalt die well, that is, an easy, a quiet death.

and preparing sickness), or the gate be hewn down by a violent death, or the gate be burnt down by a raging and frantic fever, a gate into heaven I shall have, for from the Lord is the cause of my life, and with God the Lord are the issues of death. And further we carry not this second acceptation of the words, as this issue of death is liberatio in morte, God's care that the soul be safe, what agonies soever the body suffers in the hour of death.

But pass to our third part and last part: As this issue of death is liberatio per mortem, a deliverance by the death of another. Sufferentiam Job audisti, et vidisti finem Domini, says Saint James, (v. 11), You have heard of the patience of Job, says he: all this while you have done that, for in every man, calamitous, miserable man, a Job speaks. Now, see the end of the Lord, sayeth that apostle, which is not that end that the Lord proposed to himself (salvation to us), nor the end which he proposes to us (conformity to him), but see the end of the Lord, says he, the end that the Lord himself came to, death, and a painful and a shameful death: but why did he die? and why die so? Quia Domini Domini sunt exitus mortis (as Saint Augustine, interpreting this text, answers that question<sup>27</sup>), because to this God our Lord belonged the issues of death. Quid apertius diceretur? says he there, What can be more obvious, more manifest than this sense of these words? In the former part of this verse it is said, He that is our God is the God of salvation; Deus salvos faciendi, so he reads it, the God that must save us. Who can that be, says he, but Jesus? For therefore that name was given him because he was to save us. And to this Jesus, says he, this Saviour<sup>28</sup>, belong the issues of death; Nec oportuit eum de hac vita alios exitus habere

<sup>27</sup> De Civitate Dei, lib. xvii. 618.      <sup>28</sup> Matt. i. 21.

quam mortis : being come into this life in our mortal nature, he could not go out of this life any other way but by death. Ideo dictum, says he, therefore it is said, to God the Lord belonged the issues of death ; ut ostenderetur moriendo nos salvos facturum, to show that his way to save us was to die. And from this text doth Saint Isidore prove that Christ was truly man (which as many sects of heretics denied, as that he was truly God), because to him, though he were Dominus Dominus (as the text doubles it), God the Lord, yet to him, to God the Lord, belonged the issues of death ; oportuit eum pati ; more cannot be said than Christ himself says of himself ; These things Christ ought to suffer<sup>29</sup> ; he had no other way but by death : so then this part of our sermon must needs be a passion sermon, since all his life was a continual passion, all our Lent may well be a continual Good Friday. Christ's painful life took off none of the pains of his death, he felt not the less then for having felt so much before. Nor will any thing that shall be said before lessen, but rather enlarge the devotion, to that which shall be said of his passion at the time of due should die, must die, and non exitus (said Saint Augustine), God the Lord had no issue but by death, and oportuit pati (says Christ himself), all this Christ ought to suffer, was bound to suffer; Deus ultimo Deus, says David, God is the God of revenges, he would not pass over the son of man unrevenge, unpunished. But then Deus ultionum libère egit (says that place), the God of revenges works freely; he punishes, he spares whom he will. And would he not spare himself? he would not: Dilectio fortis ut mors, love is strong as death<sup>30</sup>; stronger, it drew in death, that naturally is not welcome. Si possibile, says Christ, if it be possible, let this cup pass, when his love, expressed in a former decree with his Father, had made it impossible. Many waters quench not love<sup>31</sup>. Christ tried many: he was baptised out of his love, and his love determined not there; he mingled blood with water in his agony, and that determined not his love; he wept pure blood, all his blood at all his eyes, at all his pores, in his flagellation and thorns (to the Lord our God belonged the issues of blood), and these expressed, but these did not quench his love. He would not spare, nay, he could not spare himself. There was nothing more free, more voluntary, more spontaneous than the death of Christ. It is true, libère egit, he died voluntarily; but yet when we consider the contract that had passed between his Father and him, there was an oportuit, a kind of necessity upon him: all this Christ ought to suffer. And when shall we date this obligation, this oportuit, this necessity? When shall we say that began? Certainly this decree by which Christ was to suffer all this was an eternal decree, and was there any thing before that that was eternal? Infinite love, eternal love; be pleased to follow this home, and to consider it as though he were to be the better for it. baptism to be baptized with<sup>34</sup>; and he was in it was accomplished, and yet this baptism death. The Holy Ghost calls it joy (for they was set before him he endured the cross)<sup>35</sup>; was not a joy of his reward after his passion, but that filled him even in the midst of his torment arose from him; when Christ calls his calice and no worse (Can ye drink of my cup)<sup>36</sup>, he not odiously, not with detestation of it. It was a cup, salus mundo, a health to all things. And quid retribuam, says David, What shall to the Lord<sup>37</sup>? Answer you with David, A calicem, I will take the cup of salvation; take cup is salvation, his passion, if not into your imitation, yet into your present contemplation behold how that Lord that was God, yet could die, must die for our salvation. That and Elias talked with Christ in the transfiguration both Saint Matthew and Saint Mark<sup>38</sup> tells what they talked of, only Saint Luke. Discipuli prefigured this issue of our Lord, and in passing out of Egypt through the Red Sea, had foretold that actual prophecy, Christ passing of mankind through the sea of his blood; and Elias, whoseodus and issue of this world was a figure of Christ'sension; had no doubt a great satisfaction in talking of our blessed Lord, de excessu ejus, of the full summation of all this in his death, which was to be accomplished at Jerusalem. Our meditation of his death should be more visceral, and affect us more because it is of a thing already done. The ancient Romans had a certain tenderness and detestation of the name of death; they could not name death, no, not their wills; there they could not say, Si mori timerit, but si quid humanitas contingat, nor if when I die, but when the course of nature is accomplished upon me. To us that speak daily of the death of Christ (he was crucified, dead, and buried), can the memory or the mention of our own death be irksome or bitter? There are in these latter times amongst us that name death freely enough, and the death of God, in blasphemous oaths and execrations. Miserable men, who shall therefore be said never to have named God, because they have named him too often; and therefore hear Jesus say, Nescivi vos, I never knew you, because they made themselves too familiar with God. Moses and Elias talked with Christ of his death in a holy and joyful sense, of the benefit which they and all the world were to receive by that. Discourses of religion should not be out of curiosity, but to edification. And then they talked with Christ of his death at that time when he was in the greatest height of glory, that ever he admitted in this world, that is, his transfiguration. And we are afraid to speak to the great men of this world of their death, but cherish in them a vain imagination of immortality

<sup>30</sup> Cant. viii. 6.<sup>31</sup> Vers. 7.

this present day that day in thy devotion, and c what he did, and remember what you have Before he instituted and celebrated the sac (which was after the eating of the passover), I ceeded to that act of humility, to wash his di feet, even Peter's, who for a while resisted him preparation to the holy and blessed sacramen thou with a sincere humility sought a reconc
with all the world, even with those that hav averse from it, and refused that reconciliatio thee? If so, and not else, thou hast spent th part of his last day in a conformity with him.
the sacrament he spent the time till night in in preaching, in psalms : hast thou considered worthy receiving of the sacrament consid~~er~~ in a nuation of holiness after, as well as in a prep before? If so, thou hast therein also conformed to him ; so Christ spent his time till night. A he went into the garden to pray, and he pray lixious, he spent much time in prayer, how Because it is literally expressed, that he praye

that time were spent in a holy recommendation of thyself to God, and a submission of thy will to his, it was spent in a conformity to him. In that time, and in those prayers, was his agony and bloody sweat. I will hope that thou didst pray ; but not every ordinary and customary prayer, but prayer actually accompanied with shedding of tears and dispositively in a readiness to shed blood for his glory in necessary cases, puts thee into a conformity with him. About midnight he was taken and bound with a kiss, art thou not too conformable to him in that ? Is not that too literally, too exactly thy case, at midnight to have been taken and bound with a kiss ? From thence he was carried back to Jerusalem, first to Annas, then to Caiaphas, and (as late as it was) then he was examined and buffeted, and delivered over to the custody of those officers from whom he received all those irrisions, and violences, the covering of his face, the spitting upon his face, the blasphemies of words, and the smartness of blows, which that gospel mentions : in which compass fell that gallicinium, that crowing of the cock which called up Peter to his repentance. How thou passedst all that time thou knowest. If thou didst any thing that needeth Peter's tears, and hast not shed them, let me be thy cock, do it now. Now, thy Master (in the unworthiest of his servants) looks back upon thee, do it now. Betimes, in the morning, so soon as it was day, the Jews held a council in the high priest's hall, and agreed upon their evidence against him, and then carried him to Pilate, who was to be his judge ; didst thou accuse thyself when thou wakedst this morning, and wast thou content even with false accusations, that is, rather to suspect actions to have been sin, which were not, than to smother and justify such as were truly sins ? Then thou spentest that hour in conformity to him ; Pilate found no evidence against this examination, this agitation, this cribrat pursuit of thy conscience ; to sift it, to follow it sins of thy youth to thy present sins, from of thy bed to the sins of thy board, and substance to the circumstance of thy sins ?

time spent like thy Saviour's. . Pilate would save Christ, by using the privilege of the d behalf, because that day one prisoner was t livered, but they choose Barabbas ; he would ha him from death, by satisfying their fury with other torments upon him, scourging and crow thorns, and loading him with many scornful minious contumelies ; but they regarded him pressed a crucifying. Hast thou gone abo deem thy sin, by fasting, by alms, by discip mortifications, in way of satisfaction to the God ? That will not serve, that is not the right press an utter crucifying of that sin that gove and that conforms thee to Christ. Toward Pilate gave judgment, and they made such execution as that by noon he was upon t

. And then that Son of God, who was never from and yet had now come a new way unto us in assuming our nature, delivers that soul (which was ever out of his Father's hands) by a new way, a voluntary emission of it into his Father's hands; for though to this God our Lord belonged these issues of death, so that considered in his own contract, he must necessarily die, yet at no breach or battery which he had made upon his sacred body issued his soul; when he emitted, he gave up the ghost; and as God breathed a soul into the first Adam, so this second Adam breathed his soul into God, into the hands of God.

There we leave you in that blessed dependancy, to cling upon him that hangs upon the cross, there bathe in his tears, there suck at his wounds, and lie down in peace in his grave, till he vouchsafe you a resurrection, and an ascension into that kingdom which He hath prepared for you with the inestimable price of his incorruptible blood. Amen.

* * *

